

Calhoun: The NPS Institutional Archive

DSpace Repository

Theses and Dissertations

1. Thesis and Dissertation Collection, all items

1970

A legal analysis of loss of United States nationality as a result of unauthorized service in the Armed Forces of a foreign state.

Michael, George Lewis

George Washington University

http://hdl.handle.net/10945/15066

Downloaded from NPS Archive: Calhoun

Calhoun is the Naval Postgraduate School's public access digital repository for research materials and institutional publications created by the NPS community. Calhoun is named for Professor of Mathematics Guy K. Calhoun, NPS's first appointed -- and published -- scholarly author.

> Dudley Knox Library / Naval Postgraduate School 411 Dyer Road / 1 University Circle Monterey, California USA 93943

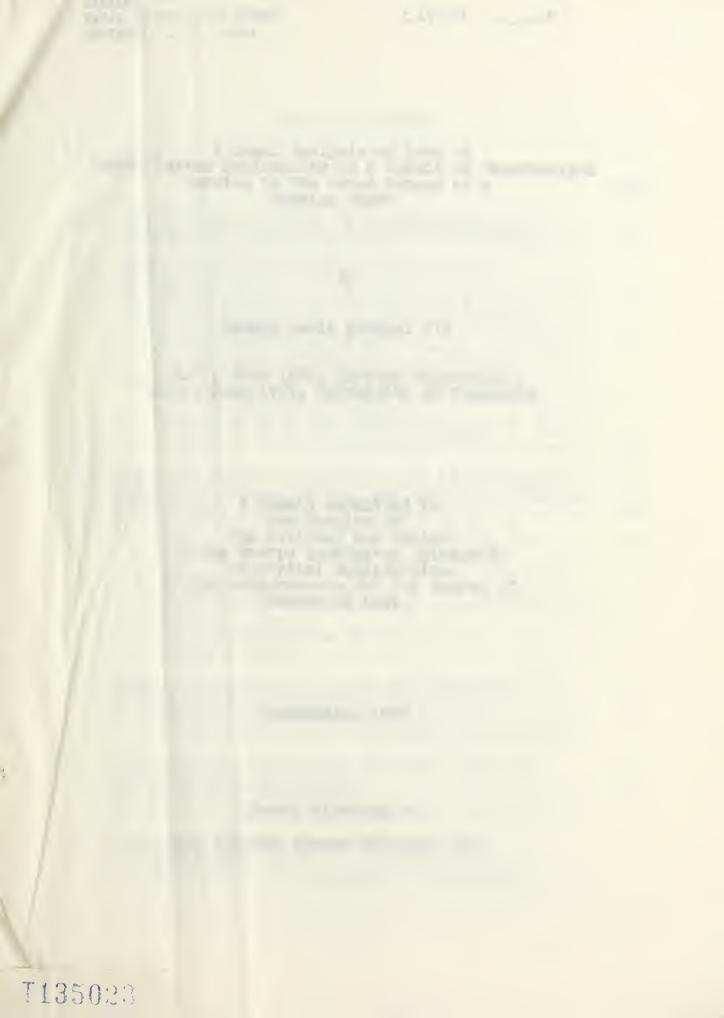

http://www.nps.edu/library

A LEGAL ANALYSIS OF LOSS OF UNITED STATES NATIONALITY AS A RESULT OF UNAUTHORIZED SERVICE IN THE ARMED FORCES OF A FOREIGN STATE.

by

George Lewis Michael

LIBRARY
NAVAL POSTGRADUATE SCHOOL
MONTEREY, CALIF. 93940

4. M5/53

7-17770/42717177 27 143

NAVAL POSTGRADUATE SCHOOL
MONTEREY, CALLE, 93340

A Legal Analysis of loss of United States Nationality as a Result of Unauthorized Service in the Armed Forces of a Foreign State

By

George Lewis Michael III

A.B., June 1961, Marvard University LL.B., June 1964, University of Minnesota

and the second s

A Thesis submitted to the Faculty of The National Law Center of the George Washington University in partial satisfaction of the requirements for the degree of Master of Laws

September, 1970

Thesis directed by

Dr. William Thomas Mallison, Jr.

NAVAL POR IDITION OFFICELY STATES

The state of the s

DE BOOK AND SHOULD

Deliver of the Control of the Contro

TO DESCRIPTION OF THE PARTY OF

of the court will be

T ble of Contents

		7400
פוקרר	angerothe survival and the survival and	inge a le
11	The Injury tion and Jationality of of Poving Co.  The July Constitute of the Constit
III	through to make on loss of Istionality through to make and service in Jordan Total Torces  rosion of the Constitutional Basis of Section 3+0(a)(3) of the Immigration and Nationality at of 1952  ttorney General's Opinion on the iffect of Department of State Position on the iffect of The Make	1
777	Customery International Law and the Attended of the Control of the	53
7	the Might to a Mational to Mater Sight on the Misterical Development	61
A solution	Convention 1 ublic international in the Decline of Governmental laises - line	nn.

ARREST TO STREET

Table of Contents

	Lage
VII Contribution of Israeli Law to the Controvers between the hited Itates and Irab Mations	of more
VIII the second for the Inited State towns Deprivation of Nationality for Section Service in Foreign Apped Torges.  Auture Constitutional Challenges to Section 349(a)(3)  B. In Approach to Deprivation of Nationality for the Puture Pootnotes
ppendir 1	163
ppendix 3
Appendix C	1 ,

I Introduction Loss of Mationality as an International Law and a Domestic Law groolen

Nationality, as a legal concept, is a term applied to the identity relationship of an individual with a particular Nation-Itate. Thus, nationality law is that authoritative process which defines the legal relationship, entailing rights and duties, which exists between the individual and the Ptate conferring its nationality. The decision as to who is, and who is not, entitled to the benefits and privileges of the nationality of a particular state is inherently a domestic law question, subject to reasonable standards of effective connection between the individual and the Nation-State whose nationality is claimed.

The Convention on Certain Questions Lelating to the Conflict of Nationality Laws, adopted at the Hague Conference for Codification of International Law on 12 April 1930, provides:

"Art. 1. It is for each state to determine under its own law who are its nationals. This law shall be recognized by other states in so far as it is consistent with international conventions, international customs, and the principles of law generally recognized with regard to nationality.

Art. 2. Any question as to whether a person possesses the nationality of a particular state shall be determined in accordance with the law of that state."3

As stated by Oppenheir, "It is not for International Law, but for Municipal Law to determine who is, and who is not, to ## the second of the second of the second of

The statement of the control of the statement of the stat

THE RESIDENCE OF THE PARTY OF T

and the factor and the set the set the set of the set o

be considered a subject." The right to delimit those individuals who are considered to be its nationals is an essential element of State sovereignty. Sovereignty, which has been described as "the supreme and independent authority of States over all persons and things in their territory", 5 implies perforce the personal supremacy of a State over its nationals in defining their status and in prescribing their rights and duties.

However, by virtue of the freedom of action given to 3tates with respect to questions concerning nationality, conflicts between provisions of domestic legislation relating to nationality frequently arise between States on the internationality frequently arise between States on the international plane. Thus, questions of nationality are not relegated solely to the municipal sphere, and rules of international law regulating the manner in which nations resolve conflicts of nationality law can be deduced from the practive of States, international conventions and the decisions of international tribunals. As stated by Weis in his treatise on this subject, these rules do not operate directly upon individuals in conferring or withdrawing nationality they are, rather, primarily 'negative rules, restricting the freedom of States to confer or withdraw nationality."

Wation-State, and thus, must be distinguished from the concept of nationality which entails ethnic ties. States

The contract of the colored and the contract of particular contracts of particular colors and colored and the colored and the

The American of the specimen term and at all additionables and not copy indicated in the copy and the public method is proved that went above allege states with method to have

"The term 'nationality'.../as/a politicolegal term denoting membership of a State ...must be distinguished from nationality as a historico-biological term denoting membership of a nation. In the latter sense it means the subjective corporate sentiment of unity of members of a specific group forming a 'race' or 'nation' of a territory and which, by seeking political "unity on that territory, may lead to the formation of a State.

Nationality in that sense, which is essentially a conception of a non-legal nature belonging to the field of sociology and ethnography, is... to be differentiated....

The subject of nationality has given rise to a vast wealth of legal literature on the planes of both numicipal and international law, and it may be anticipated that questions involving nationality will continue to occupy the attentions of municipal and international authoritative decision-makers (e.g., judges, arbitrators, public officials) for as long as the concept of the Nation-State exists in law. Nor are such issues necessarily isolated problems, for they may have constitutional, diplomatic and political consequences (to name but a possible few) which are of profound import.

accusation by trab governments and organizations that the hited States is encouraging its citizens to serve in the armed forces of Israel. Such encouragement is said to be based on the alleged refusal of the United States to Imprive its citizens of their citizenship for service in foreign armed forces, despite the fact that expatriation is statutorally prescribed for such activity. The mabs claim that, by permitting its citizens to serve in the Israeli armed forces, the hited States has departed from a position of impartiality in the continuing international conflict in the Middle Cast, and is actively esponsing the mins of Israel.

"Before the meeting of the trab League Joint Defense Council went into closed session, Abdel Khalek Rassouma, the rab League's secretary general, denounced the "United States over a two-year-old court decision that Americans need not sut attically lose their citizenship through service in foreign armies. Trabs charge that the decision was taken to permit Americans to volunteer for the Israeli armed forces." 10

"'This participation (of American citizens in Israeli services) is contrary to international law principles, resolutions of the United Mations and American interests in the Arab world, 'Hassouna said.'11

The accusation was carried even further by mother trab official:

The date of State Targul About Bissa, who chaired the weeting of the Arab League Joint Defense Council, told the opening session, 'the Whited States has put itself williagly in a position of direct confrontation with reb nations. It has become very clear the Whited States is Arab energy number one and it is now for Arabs to determine or define their attitude toward the United States', Lisan said. Tissa charged merica not only delivered arms and money to Israel but 'has mobilized its sons to serve in the Israeli army'. "12

The state of the s

MARKET BY THE RESIDENCE AND ADDRESS OF THE PERSON ADDRESS OF THE PERSON AND ADDRESS OF THE PERSON ADDR

A SHARE YOU AND ADDRESS OF THE PARTY OF THE

This criticism of the United States is the result of an interpretation placed on the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the case of Afroyim v. Busk, 13 an interpretation which appears to be accepted in the statements of officials of the United States Government. 14 In Afroyim, the Supreme Court condemned, and effectively held unconstitutional, Section 401(e) of the Nationality Act of 1940 (Oct. 14, 1940, c.876, 54 Stat. 1168, as amended 58 Stat. 746) which prescribed loss of nationality for any United States citizen who voted in a foreign political election. 15

Court did not rule that "Americans need not automatically lose their citizenship through service in foreign armies". However, the decision in Afroxim has been interpolated to extend its proscription to other sections of the Immigration and Netionality Act of 1952, particularly Section 349 (a)(3), (8 U.S.C. $1481(a)(3)), which provides that a United States national shall lose his nationality by entering, or serving in, the armed forces of a foreign state without obtaining the prior, written permission of the Secretaries of State and of Defense. Such an interpolation would hold that expatriation for foreign military service is also unconstitutional and that the provision is, a fortiori, unenforceable. This view has apparently been adopted by the United States Department of State and Department of Justice, 16 and Arab leaders have

The state of the s

and would have been been an expense of the system

drawn their own conclusions from it with regard to United States Middle Last policy.

Thus, the question of United States citizenship and nationality, which is generally considered a matter of municipal law and domestic jurisdiction, is vaulted upon an international stage as a factor in an ongoing competition of exclusive interests in the Middle Bast. Specially does the question of nationality appear to be one of municipal law where the issue does not involve the conferring of nationality and the assertion of the attendant right of protection of an individual by one State in opposition to the claims of another State, but instead concerns the deprivation of its own nationality by a State for its own purposes.

However, the problem posed the Thited States and its decision-makers by the Arab allegations is not eliminated by labelling the matter a question of domestic law. By virtue of the fact that the constitutionality of automatic expatriation for the performance of certain acts under Thited States law has become an issue of international contention, the matter becomes of immediate concern in international law. Is long at nations advocate the resort to law and its processes of authoritative decision making in maintaining a world public order free from coercion and violence, it is international law to which we must turn in resolving disputes. The religious in maintain, however, the provisions and requirements of initial States law must be examined in an effort to determine whether the conflict can be eliminated by douestic action on the part of United States officials.

Subsequent examination of this problem will necessitate an appraisal of sources of public international law bearing on the withdrawal of nationality by a unilateral act of State, and of the guidance provided by international human rights standards.

-comment of the section of the secti

II United States Law governing the Loss of Nationality

A. The Immigration and Nationality Act of 27 June 1952

1. Provisions

The Immigration and Nationality Act (66 Stat. 163), enacted into law over Presidential veto on 27 June 1952, provides in Chapter 3 for the loss of United States nationality by the performance of certain acts, or the fulfillment of certain conditions, specified in the chapter. Such loss of nationality is to be automatic. As declared in Section 356 of the Act:

"The loss of nationality under this chapter shall result solely from the performance by a national of the acts or fulfillment of the conditions specified in this chapter." 18

Inter alia, Section 349 of the Immigration and Nationality Act provides:

"(a) From and after the effective date of this Act a person who is a national of the United States whether by birth or naturalization, shall lose his nationality by --

(3) entering, or serving in, the armed forces of a foreign state unless, prior to such entry or service, such entry or service is specifically authorized in writing by the Secretary of State and the Secretary of Defense: Provided: That the entry into such service by a person prior to the attainment of his eighteenth birthday shall serve to expatriate such person only if there exists an option to secure a release from such service and such person fails to exercise such option at the attainment of his eighteenth the second second second second second

CHICAGO IN THE PARTY NAMED IN

birthday. 10 or

(5) voting in a solitical election in a foreign state or participating in an election or plebiscite to determine the sovereignty over foreign territory. 2 or ...."

2. Terislative History

While Section 349(a)(5) of the Immigration and Tationality Act of 1952 is a re-enactment in exact terms of Section 401(e) of the Nationality Act of 1940, Section 349(a)(3) is distinctly different from its counterpart in the 1940 Act, Section 401(c). That section of the Nationality Act of 1940 provided:

"Jec. 4. . . person who is a national of the Phited State , whether by birth or naturalization, shall lose his nationality by

(c) Intering or serving in, the armed forces of a foreign state unless expressly authorized by the laws of the mited States, if he has or acquires the nationality of such foreign state; or ....

of United States nationality for service in foreign remed forces on having or obtaining the nationality of the fereign state in whose armed forces the individual served, present provisions admit of the creation of a class of stateless persons — those who serve in a foreign armed force but do not acquire the foreign state's nationality.

THE PROPERTY AND ADDRESS OF THE PERSON NAMED IN COLUMN TWO IN COLUMN TO THE PERSON NAMED IN COLU

Congressional debute prior to pulsage of the Today tion and Mation Lity of of 1952 we long and acrimonious. 21 Movever, discussion of the provisions of the proposed legislation focused primarily on the re-triction of immigration quotas by national origin, and on the alleged racial discrimination which such restrictions rupresented by favoring immigrants of inglo-Jamon and northern Buropean ancestry. Also of prime consern in debute were the broad powers given the United States Attorney General in matters of visa issuance and deportation of aliens. There provisions of the popularly known licCarran-Walter Bill were the subjects of extended debate in the House of Representatives and, particularly, in the Senate. (In opposition to this proposed legislation in the Senate were the proponents of the more liberal Humphrey-Lehman Bill.) Yet despite the plethors of argument, nowhere in the debute were the provisions of Section 349(a)(3), consoming for time are of service, ever specifically discussed. During one portion of the dabate, Senator Demphrey offered for the Jenate's consid ration . memorandum prepared by the Subronmittee on Intigration of the merican Dar Association, concerning possible constitution 1 objections to provisions of the McCarran- Talter Fill. Ho mention was made in this memorandum concerning loss of nationality as the result of service in foreign amed forces. 2

The report of the House Judiciary Committee accommensing and the second s the property of the party of the second state THE RESERVE THE PARTY OF THE PA and the beauty and which the state of the Real Property and the property of the water to sell our manner of the first term of the H.R. 5679, GCnd. Congress, 2nd. Session (1957), which was the version of the Immigration and Metionality let passed by the House of Representatives and, with some modification, by the Senate, contains simply the statement with reference to Section 347(a)(3):

"Loss of Untionality -- Other Than By Judicial I vocation 1. loss of Wationality by nativeborn and naturalized citizens The Mationality Lot of 1940, as amended, lists 10 acts by which nationals, whether native-born or naturalized, divest themselves of their nationality. The bill continues in effect, with modifications hereinafter suplained, the provisions of the Nationality Act of 1940 relating to acts which cause loss of nationality, but includes provisions under which a person who commits certain expatriating acts while under 18 years of age may repudiate those acts and thus preserve his United States citizenship. क्षेट और और और

The third act causing loss of nationality is entering or serving in the armed forces of a foreign state unless expressly authorized to do so by the laws of the 'mited States. The bill requires, in lieu of general authorization, that a specific outhorization in writing must be made by the Secretary of State and the Secretery of Defense before a nutional of the hit d States my ent r or corv in the armed forces of a forcing state without losing his status or a nation 1 of the Chiled tate. The bill contains a new provision that national under 10 years of are shall los netionality by service in the armed forces of a foreign state only if there exists an option to scoura release from such service and he

"fails to exercise that option when he becomes 18 years of age."23

In hearings on the proposed Immigration and Nationality Act, held by the Joint Subcommittees of the Committees on the Judiciary of the Senate and House of Representatives, very little comment was made with respect to the provision providing for loss of United States nationality through service in foreign armed forces. One proposal bearing on Section 349(a)(3) of the bill, which was submitted by Assistant Secretary of State Jack K. McFall, would have inserted a new subsection (e) under Section 324 of the bill for the purpose of permitting persons who lost their United States nationality under certain subsections of Section 349 (a) to return to the United States within five years as nonquota immigrants for the purpose of recovering nationality through naturalization. A proviso to this proposed subsection, however, would have withheld the privilege of returning from one who lost Inited States nationality by serving in the armed forces of a country engaged in hostilities against the nited States. 24 The proposal was substantially incorporated in the bill as Section 327. 25

Inother proposal with respect to Section 349(a)(3) was submitted by Henry I. Buther, who appeared before the Joint Subcommittees as a member of the Legislative Committee of the National Council on Naturalization and Citizenship. Fr. Dutler

Property man to hand of

make from any of the Personal William State of the Committee of Fig. 1, 1987. the parties depending and appropriate making the property OUR SET TO THE SECTION WHEN DO SET TO SET A SAFETY more whalf that the section with the second of the was to street the court of the same of the same of the -sitrostron processor to more set sit possible place THE RESERVE TO SECURITY OF ALMOST AND ADDRESS OF THE PARTY OF THE PART the part tradema and to direct or tradema to the Administration of part of bettermined (continues to the first first first Toronto or other ness (All Communications on American plans Communications on State of State

suggested that the authorization to serve in foreign armed forces "should be by either the Secretary of State or the Secretary of Defense in the alternative, rather than by both in the conjunctive; and their authorization should be as an alternative to authorization by the laws of the United States, and it should not be required prior to such entry."26 Mr. Butler was particularly concerned with preserving the nationality status of Americans who served in the armed forces of countries which subsequently became allies of the United States in international hostilities, as witness the following exchange during his oral testimony:

> Mr. Butler. .... Now, for example, this country owes a vast debt of gratitude to very many loyal United States citizens who joined the Allied forces both before the entry of the United States into World War I and into forld War II. At the time those people entered the service of the foreign countries, it is a foregone conclusion that no Secretary of State and no Secretary of Defense would have given them written permission, nor would Congress have enacted laws authorizing them to do so prior to our entering into the conflict.

If, at a later date, this country finds those men served this country as fully as though they had served in our own ray, then such permission, either by an act of Congress, or by either the Secretary of State or Secretary of Defense should suffice. It is suggested that such liberality would not prejudice this country, because no such permission would be granted if they had entered any forces hostile to this country. If they have entered forces which have been our allies, like the Flying Tigers, where our allies paved the way, their aperican citizenship should be protected to the same extent as if subsequently they were told

"they could join the British forces with no loss by so doing. /sic/ Representative Walter. 4r. Miller, only yesterday, suggested a solution by exempting from this section the men who served with forces which subsequently became our allies.

Mr. Butler. That would be a step in the right direction. I am still fearful of requiring written permission prior to entry in the conjunctive.

Many of those youngsters who did not stop to get permission from anybody felt they were justified in doing it, and since then we have said they were, and they have served this country ably.

Representative Chelf: You are talking about friendly countries.

Mr. Butler. Only friendly countries, because nobody would give sanction to any hostile country. That is why I say I feel it is a perfectly safe suggestion. ... '27

While he mentioned as a factual matter that the proposed draft eliminated the provision that loss of nationality would occur only if the individual had or acquired the nationality of the foreign state in whose armed forces he served, that change was permitted to pass without comment. Significantly, however, in his prepared statement which was submitted to the Joint Subcommittees, Mr. Butler remarked with respect to the proposed text of Section 349(a)(4), providing for loss of nationality by accepting, or performing the duties of, any office, post or employment under the government of a foreign state:

> "The proposed section climinates the words 'for which only nations of such state are eligible' and substitutes 'if he has or acquires the nationality of such foreign state'. The national council endorses this amendment insofar as it tends

The second section is a second section of the party of th The state of the s

"to decrease the incidence of state-lessness."28

This failure to comment with respect to the creation of a potential for statelessnes, in the proposed legislation, constituting as it did a radical departure from the terms of Section 401(e) of the 1940 act, can only be regarded as inexplicable when contrasted with the endorsement (for the reason that it reduced statelessness) of the change to the immediately succeeding section which incorporated the precise language deleted from the section on foreign armed service. Prominent Government witnesses, such as Deputy , ttorney General Peyton Ford, 29 Acting Commissioner Argyle R. Mckey of the Immigration and Naturalization Service 30 and L. Paul Winings, General Counsel of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, 31 who testified before the Joint Subcommittees, did not mention the proposed Section 349 in their statements. Nevertheless, significant criticism was leveled at the loss of nationality provisions in general during the Jearings in the statement of Gustav Lazarus, President of the association of Immigration and Nationality Lavyers. 32 lir. Lazarus, Lovever, did not specifically analyze Section 349(4)(3).

3. legislative Purpose

With such a paucity of information concerning the Congressional intent behind the enacting of Section 349(a)(3), it is virtually impossible to determine that Congress sought

which is presented any particular or

per contract of the contract o The state of the state of the state of the particular and AND REAL PROPERTY AND ADDRESS OF THE PARTY ADDRESS OF THE PARTY AND ADDRESS OF THE PARTY ADDRESS OF THE PAR THE RESERVE TO SERVE AND ADDRESS OF THE PARTY OF THE PART the same of the sa with the control of t the second contract of the second of the second of the second and the second law in the second second second second and the second s to accomplish by the provision, or whether they appreciated the significance of the change in the prior law. Service in an armed force by an alien without loss of prior nationality, or the acquisition of a new or additional nationality, was certainly not unknown to the Congress. Inited States selective service laws make male aliens admitted for permanant residence subject to draft in the 7.5. military service. 33 In addition, such service is not deemed to confer United States citizenship on the individual alien. 34 It could not have been thought that a United States citizen who served in a foreign armed force would necessarily acquire the nationality of that country. It would appear, rather, that Congress enacted Section 349(a)(3) without consideration of its possible impact upon the individual through the creation of the potential for statelessness.

Such attention as was focused on the measure was concerned with the position of those who served in the armed forces of a nation which later became allied with the Inited States in hostilities. No consideration was given to the fate of citizens who served in the armed forces of a country engaged in conflicts toward which the United States sought to preserve a neutral stance -- or indeed, that the Inited States might ever seek to be neutral. The foreign armed forces under discussion during the Hearings were either enemies or allies.

Nevertheless, since Section 349(a)(3) is of general applicability, its proscription depend upon the political relationship between the United States and the foreign government in question -- allied, neutral or enemy. Is will be discussed infra, Section 349(a)(3) does fill a histus in the United States Neutrality Laws; that it was intended to do so, however, cannot even be speculated.

The proposal that authorization be permitted either before or after service in the foreign armed force, as suggested by Mr. Butler, would certainly have put a premium upon a United States citizen's attempt to second-guess the future foreign policy of his government, if he was concerned with preserving his nationality. The failure to incorporate this proposal in Section 349(a)(3) does indicate a Congressional intent not to countenance such activity.

B. The Decision in Afroyin v. Rusk

1. The Majority Coinion

In the case of ifrovin v. Lusk, supra, the betitlener, Afroyim, who had been born in Doland, immigrated to the United States and became a naturalized citizen in 1926. In 1990, he went to Israel, and in 1991 he voluntarily voted in a political election for the legislative body of Israel, the Unesset. Then he applied for a renewal of his United States passport in 1960, the Department of State refused to grant the renewal on the ground that he had lost his citizenship by virtue of Section 401(e) of the Wationality Act of 1940, citing his participation in the 1971 Enesset election. 35 frowth thereupon brought suit for a declaratory judgment of citizenship, relying not upon the obligations of any duel Israeli-Thited States nationality, 36 but alleging that Section 401(0) violated both the Dis Process Clause of the Fifth imendment and Section 1, clause I of the Fourteenth Arendment. petitioner argued that, since neither the Fourteenth Frandment nor any other provision of the Constitution express; granted Congress the power to deprive a person of his citizenship once it had been acquired, the only way he could lose his citizenship was "by his own voluntary renunciation of it."37 This argument was rejected by the District Court and the Court of Appeals, which upheld the constitutionality of the statute on the basis of Congress' implied power to regulate foreign affairs. With regard to these prior decisions the Supreme Court stated:

The second second of the second secon

And the second section of the second section of the second section of the second section secti

"Consequently, petitioner was held to have lost his American citizenship regardless of his intention not to give it up. This is precisely what this Court held in Perez v. Thornell, 350 U.S. 44, 78 S. Ct. 568, 25. Ma. 2d 603. "36 letter discussing the baskground and rationals of the lerez case, supra, Yr. Justice Rhadl, epocking for the majority of the Court in a 5 to 4 decision, stated:

named to be a supposed to the facility of the same of - AND THE PERSON NAMED IN COLUMN TWO IS NOT THE OWNER, AND THE PERSON NAMED IN THE PERSON NAMED IN COLUMN 2 I THE REAL PROPERTY AND

'Pirst we reject the idea on resuch in Ferez that, aside from the Fourteenth Amendment, Congress has any general power, express or implied, to take away an Imerican citizen's citizenship without his assent. This power cannot, as Perez indicated, be surtained as an inplied attribute of sovereignty possessed by all nations. Other nations are governed by their own constitutions, if any, and we can draw no support from theirs. In our country the people are sovereign and the Government cannot sever its relationship to the people by taking away their citizenship. Our Constitution governs us and we must never forget that our Constitution limits the Government to those powers specifically granted or those that are necessary and proper to carry out the specifically granted ones. The Constitution of course, grants Congress no express power to strip people of their citizenship, whether in the exercise of the implied power to regulate foreign affairs or in the exercise of any specifically granted power. And even before the adoption of the Fourteenth mendment, views were empressed in Congress, and by this Court that under the Constitution the Government was granted no power, even under its express nower to pass a uniform rule of naturalization, to determine what conduct should and should not result in the loss of citizenship. 30

In support of its decision, the Court detailed various proposals for defining conduct which would result in expatriation which Congress, from its earliest days in the late eighteenth century to 1968, had considered and rejected. In discussing the passage of the Pourteenth Amendment, the Court assented to the proposition that the primary surpose served in its enactment was to give persuaence and security to the citizenship of Negroes, who, at that time, had recently been granted citizenship by the Civil lights let of 1366. The Court thereupon held that this primary purpose would be thwarted, by holding that the Covernment can rob a citizenship without his consent by simply proceeding to act under an implied general power to regulate foreign affairs or some other power generally granted.

Over your manager of allower and of advanced NOT THE REAL PROPERTY OF THE PARTY NAMED IN

Basing its holding in the case on the language and purpose of the Fourteenth Amendment, the Court concluded:

"Citizenship is no light trifle to be jeopardized any moment Congress decides to do so under the name of one of its general or implied grants of power. In some instances, loss of citizenship can mean that a man is left without the trotection of citizenship in any country in the world - as a mun without a country. Citizenship in this Nation is a part of a cooperative affair. Its citizenry is the country and the country is its citizenry. The very nature of our free government makes it completely incongruous to have a rule of law under which a group of citizens temporarily in office can deprive another group of citizens of their citizenship. We hold that the Fourteenth Amendment was designed to, and does, protect every citizen of this Nation against a congressional foreible destruction of his citizenship, whatever his creed, color, or race. Our holding does no more than to give to this citizen that which is his own, a constitutional right to remain a citisen in a free country unless he voluntarily relinquishes that citizenship.

Perez v. Fromell i. overralel. The judgment is reversed. "#1 and the second of the second of the second HAT PARTY IS NOT THE PARTY OF T

2. The Dissenting Opinion

In dissent fro, the najority opinion in frozing Mr. Justice Marlan, speaking also for Justices Clark, Stewart and thite, adhered to the reasoning of Ferez y. Promell. 42 In that case the Supreme Court upheld as constitutional the same provision of the Nationality act of 1940 with which Afrovin was concerned. There the Court held that the Congress derived, from its implied power to regulate foreign affairs, the authority to expatriate citizens who voluntarily perform acts which may be prejudicial to the foreign relations of the United States, and which may rousonably be considered to be a dilution of allegiance to the United States. Such authority was construed as a 'necell cary and proper" means of exercising that implied power, and Congress could appropriately consider voluntary voting in a foreign political election to be an act within the scope of that authority.

The dissenters attacked as "conclusory" and "cuite unsubstantial" the majority's assertion that the Congress was without power, express or implied, to expatriate a citizen "without his assent". In addition, in connection with the term "assent", Mr. Justice Harlan pointed out an inherent ambiguity in the majority opinion. It one point Mr. Justice Black, writing for the majority stated, 'we agree with the Chief Justice's dissent in the Berez case that the

Man and an A

Covernment is without power to rob a citizen of his citizenship under $4-01(e)." However, in his lerex dissent, The Chief Justice also stated that:

"It has long been recognized that citizenship may not only be volunt rily renounced through exercise of the right of expatriation but also by other actions in derogation of undivided allegiance to this country. While the essential qualities of the citizen-state relationship under our Constitution proclude the exercise of governmental power to divest hited 5t tes citizenship, the establishment of that relationship did not impair the principle that conduct of a citizen showing a voluntary transfer of allegiance is an abandonment of citizenship. Nor is this the only act by which the citizen may show a voluntary abandonment of citizenship. Any action by which he manifests allegiance to a foreign state may be so inconsistent with the retention of citizenship as to result in loss of that status. In recognizing the consequence of such action, the Government is not taking away United States citizenship to implement its general regulatory powers, for, as previously indicated, in my judgment citizenship is immune from divestment under these powers. Rather, the Government is simply giving formal recognition to the inevitable consequence of the citizen's pyn voluntary surrender of his citizenship. "Ho

The Chief Justice nevertheless pursued his dissenting argument by asserting that the fact of voting in a foreign political election was insufficient "to show a voluntary absolution of citizenship." Such an acknowledgment (that "actions in derogation of undivided allegiance" can result in an atriction) would certainly imply acceptance and, therefore, approbation of a loss of citizenship without the citizen's assent. Let

AND DESCRIPTION OF THE PARTY OF

Let 1 the mark the mark to be a set of the mark the mark political by the mark the let of the mark the

the majority opinion in Afrovim, taken as a whole, could hardly be construed as supporting such a power on the part of Congress.

we of the word "voluntary". An example may be seen in the statement, "Our holding does no more than to give to this citizen that which is his own, a constitutional right to remain a citizen in a free country unless he voluntarily relinquishes that citizenship." Head in terms of the phrase "without his assent", the word "voluntarily" can only mean "intentionally". On the other hand, in conjunction with the approving reference to the Chief Justice's dissent in Perez, "voluntary" can be construed as describing the uncoerced commission of an act which is presumed by law to be expatriative because of its derogation of undivided allegiance. Is observed by Mr. Justice Marlan:

"Whatever the Court's position, it has assumed that voluntariness is here a term of fixed meaning: in fact, of course, it has been employed to describe both a specific intent to renounce citizenship, and the uncorred commission of an act conclusively deemed by law to be a relinquishment of citizenship. Until the Court indicates with greater precision what it means by 'assent', today's opinion will surely cause still prester confusion in this area of the law."

The dissent further challenged the historical Mais of the evidence which the majority opinion had mark flow in support of, and as compelling, its decision. In connection with statements made in Congress prior to the manage of the Courteenth Amendment, which would indicate a belief that Congress in a without power to ematriate unwilling citizens, it was observed that such comments by no means represented a consensus on the issue and that they are deductions largely based on constitutional premise thich have since been abandoned. These premises stemmed from the Jeffersonian contention that a person's citizenship was derived primarily from his State, and only from the "ederal Government through his State. Since Congress could not control allegiance to the State government, a man perforce remained a citizen of the United States while he was a citizen of a State. Under this view, Congress would indeed possess no power to expatriate an unwilling citizen; however, the doctrine itself did not survive. In addition, contemporaneous with the passage of the Pourteenth Amendment, Congress adopted measures which in fact reveal that they considered the selver as vested with the power to expatriate unvilling citizens.

In response to the assertion by the majority that the Fourteenth Amendment establishes Congress' inability to expetriate a citizen without his consent, the discent reveals that the clause defining citizenship was included in the 'mendment only to declare unres reedly that the recently freed Negroes were citizens, and thus evoid the reasoning of the second secon the paid and the second or the second - I have a literature of the property of the state of the and provided by the company of the contract of the and the same of th made of the Name of the Parish of the Parish

×

the Dred Scott decision. Ourther, the Citizenship Clause would unequivocably lay to rest the doctrine of primary State citizenship, and would prevent any attempt to deny Nerroes the right of citizenship by denying them State citizenship. 'Nothing in the Congressional debutes, however, supports the Court's assertion that the clause was intended to deny Congress its authority to expatriate unvilling citizens." 51

With regard to dicta relied upon by the majority from the cases of Osborn v. Rank of the Inited States 52 and the United States v. Mong Kim Ark 53 the dissent reveals that they are wholly inapposite to the issue before the Court in Lirovin. In Osborn, Chief Justice Marshall stated:

"The naturalized citizen becomes a member of the society, possessing all the rights of a native citizen, and standing, in view of the constitution, on the footing of a native. The constitution does not authorize Congress to enlarge or abridge those rights. The simple power of the national legislature, is to prescribe a uniform rule of naturalization, and the mercise of this power exhausts it, so fer as respects the individual." The

In quoting from Nong Kim Ark the majority stated:

"The issues in that case were whether a person born in the hited States to Chinese aliens was a citizen of the United States and whether, nevertheless, he could be excluded under the Chinese Exclusion ct, 22 Stat. 5%. The Court first held that within the terms of the Fourteenth Amendment, Yong Rim Trk was a citizen of the United States, and then pointed out that though he right Transmission.

The state of the s

the same property and the party of the party

'The construction demanded by the pertinent historical evidence, and entirely consistent with the clause's terms and purposes, is instead that it declares to whom citizenship, as a consequence either of birth or of naturalization, initially attaches. The clause thus served at the time of its passage both to overturn Dred Scott and to provide a foundation for federal citizenship entirely independent of state citizenship in this fashion it effectively guaranteed that the Amendment's protection would not subsequently be withheld from those for whom it was principally intended. But nothing in the history, purposes, or language of the clause suggests that it forbids Congress in all circumstances to withdraw the citizenship of an unwilling citizen. To the contrary, it was expected, and should now be understood, to leave Congress at liberty to expatriate a citizen if the expatriation is an approprate /sic/exercise of a power otherwise given to Congress by the Constitution, and if the methods and terms of expatriation adopted by Congress are consistent with the Constitution's other relevant commands.

The Citizenship Clause thus neither denies nor provides to Congress any power of expatri-ation: its consequences are, for present purposes, exhausted by its declaration of the classes of individuals to whom citizenship initially attaches. Once obtained, citizenship is of course protected from arbitrary withdrawal by the constraints placed around Congress' powers by the Constitution; it is not proper to create from the Citizenship Clause an additional, and entirely unwarranted. restriction upon legislative authority. The construction now placed on the Citizenship Clause rests, in the last analysis, simply on the Court's ipse dixit, evincing little nore, it is quite apparent, than the present majority's own distaste for the expatriation power.

I believe that Perez was rightly decided, and on its authority would affirm the judgment of the Court of Appeals. "57

C. Jury my of Case law prior to from y. The

the case of Perez v. Tramell, nur, that Congress man constitutionally empowered to legislate the exactriction of citizens who, unccerced, perform acts which may reasonably be considered a diminution of their allegiance to the mitad states and which may be prejudicial to the conduct of foreign affairs. Such power was held to derive from Congress' inplied, yet inherent, authority to regulate the nation's foreign relations; expatriation was considered to be within the "ample scope" of the necessary and proper means of effectuating this authority.

power to regulate foreign affairs did not rive to Congress a carte blanche to legislate expatriation. Nr. Justice:

Frankfurter stated, "Since Congress may not not arbitrarily, a rational nexus must exist between the content of a predict power in Congress and the action of Congress in earring that power into execution." In reasoning that a rational nexus existed between voting in a foreign political election and Congress' power over foreign affairs, the Court coinst that a citizen's action may, even "unwittingly", project a court of conduct inimical to the interests of his own government. In addition, his actions may be regarded by the prople or jovernment or an expression of its policy.

THE RESERVE OF THE RESERVE OF THE PARTY OF

"The critical connection between this conduct and loss of citizenship is the fact that it is the possession of incrican citizenship by a person committing the act that makes the act potentially embarrassing to the American Government and pregnant with the possibility of embrailing this country in disputes with other nations. The termination of citizenship terminates the problem. Moreover, the fact is not without significance that Congress has interpreted this conduct, not irrationally, as importing not only something less than complete and unswerving allegiance to the United States but also elements of an allegiance to another country in some measure, at least, inconsistent with Imerican citizenship."59

of course, as the Perez majority acknowledged, the conduct which results in expatriation must be engaged in voluntarily. This did not mean, however, that to lose citizenship the person "must intend or desire to do so." In support of its position the Court cited the cases of Mackensie v. Hare, and Savorgnen v. United States, a wherein the plaintiffs, both of whom were women, were held to have lost their citizenship through marriage to a Pritish subject, and marriage to an Italian subject and subsequent application for Italian citizenship, respectively. The Court stated:

"Those two cases mean nothing -- indeed, they are decentive -- if their essential significance is not rejection of the notion that the power of Congress to terminate citizenship depends upon the citizen's assent. It is distortion of those cases to explain the arry or a theory that a citizen's assent to

Contract of the spinished and the

'denationalization may be inferred from his having engaged in conduct that amounts to an 'abandonment of citizenship' or a 'transfer of allegiance.'63

nexus" between the power to regulate foreign affairs and the conduct sought to be regulated would seem to belie the fear, expressed by Mr. Justice Douglas in a separate dissenting opinion filed in Perez, that acceptance of Congressional power to expatriate for certain activities emb prassing to foreign affairs could result in its being infinitely retended to reach any conduct disfavored by government, even political dissent. This separate dissenting opinion, with Mr. Justice Black concurring, foreshadowed the position eventually adopted by a majority of the Supreme Court in Afroyim, that expatriation can only result with the individual citizen's assent — he must unequivocably express his intention to shed his Mitted States citizenship.

In support of his opinion in dissent, Justice Douglas stated:

"Gur landmark decision on expatriation is Perkins v. Els., 307 U.S. 325, where Chief Justice Hughes wrote for the Court. The emphasis of that opinion is that 'Expatriation is the voluntary renunciation or abandonment of nationality and allegiance.' Id., at 334.

"Today's decision breaks with that tradition. It allows Congress to brand Lorented of the second second below of the remain of bottom and the decision concerned the right of election of a minor of duel nationality. There, the petitioner, Marie Elizabeth Mg, had been born in the United States of Swedish parents naturalized in the United States. During her minority she was taken to Eweden by her parents who resumed their Ewedish citizenship. Upon reaching the age of majority, she returned to the United States with the intent to remain and to maintain her United States citizenship. The question was whether or not she had lost her United States citizenship, so that she was subject to deportation, by virtue of the Naturalization Convention and Protocol of 1869 between the United States and Sweden and her parents' resumption of their Swedish citizenship. The Court held that upon her birth in the United States the petitioner became a United States citizen:

12030

THE RESIDENCE OF THE PARTY OF T

'an ambiguous act a. a 'voluntery renunciation' of citizenship when there is no requirement and no finding that the citizen transferred his loyalty from this country to another."

"... That citizenchip must be deemed to continue unless she had been deprived of it through the operation of a treaty of congressional encetnent or by voluntary action in conformity with applicable legal principles." 66 (emphasis supplied)

In holding that her right of election was preserved, and that she had effectively exercised it in favor of United Mtates citizenship, the Court stated:

A Principal Company of the Company o

To cause a loss of that citizenship in the absence of treaty or statute having that effect, there must be voluntary action and such action cannot be attributed to an infant whose removal to another country is beyond his control and the during minority is incapable of a binding choice. (emphasiz supplied)

**** Expatriation is the voluntary renunciation or abandonment of nationality and allegiance. It has no application to the removal from this country of a native citizen during minority. In such a case the voluntary action which is of the essence of the right of expatriation is lacking.

Not only does the Tig case, which was relied upon by Justice Douglas, not deal with the issues before the Court in Perez, but the actual language there employed by Chief Justice Hughes intimates some support for the Perez majority position. Nowhere does the case state that Congress cannot provide that certain conduct voluntarily engaged in by a citizen will result in expatriation, and that, even without an expression of intent on the part of the individual, such uncoerced conduct may be considered as a "voluntary renunciation or abandonment of nationality and allegiance."

Subsequent to the decision in Perez v. Bramell, supra, and prior to Afrorim v. Anal, supra, the Cuerche Court ruled on the constitutionality of various provisions of Cection 340 (a) of the Emmigration and Mationality et of 1952 (formerly Section 401 of the Mationality Act of 1940). On the same day the Perez decision was handed down, the Court announced the decision in trop v. Diller, <sup>(1)</sup> which involidated Section 349(a)(8) of the Act, <sup>60</sup> providing for less of citizenship as a result of conviction by court-mertial for descrition from the armed forces in wer tile, and consequent dis fatal or dishonorable discharge from the armed services.

The from cas , like were, was decided by a follower 5 to 4 amority. Mr. Chief Justice marris, delivering the plurality orinion of the Court and Louking for Julian Mack, Douglas and hittaker, the had joined him in distant in reres, declared that Congress had no power to empatricte, but that even if it did, the statutory provision was invalid. He found that the object of the statute as to impose on additional punishment for desertion in time of war, and that it resulted in statelessness for the individual convicted. This loss of status in the eyes of the world committees held to be a cruel and unusual punishment constitutionally prohibited by the Highth mendment. The rajority in the same was determined by the orinion of ir. Justice rough, the adhered to his belief engressed in Targe that Congress food have the nower to expatriate, but who a clar of that in this instance there was no rational combatton between the statute and the war powers of Congress. Through his concurrate in July invalidation of the statute, Justice Draman sunny the believe in composing the majority. Sustices Frontiurter, Furton, Harlan and Clark, who along with Brennen had composed the majority in Terez, dissented in Trop. They adhered to the view that Congress does possess the power of expatriation, and found no violation of the Eighth imendment or lack of rational nexus between the statute and Congressional war powers.

A CAPTURE AND RESTORED THE PERSON NAMED IN COLUMN 2 IN the officer to be a second of the second of the second of the THE RESERVE OF THE PARTY AND T THE PERSON NAMED IN COLUMN TWO IS NOT THE OWNER, BUT THE PERSON NAMED IN THE PERSON NAMED IN COLUMN TWO IS NOT DESCRIBE water old the control of the control AND AND THE PERSON NAMED IN COLUMN TWO IS NOT THE OWNER. AND AND THE RESIDENCE OF THE PARTY OF THE PA continued in the second control of the probability of personal parameter of personal parameter of THE PERSON NAMED IN COLUMN TWO IS NOT THE OWNER, THE PERSON NAMED IN COLUMN TWO IS NAME

and Trop was Nishikawa v. Dulles, 70 which concerned loss of citizenship through service in foreign armed forces under Section 401(c) of the Nationality 1ct of 1940. There, the majority of the Court led by Mr. Chief Justice Varren, did not reach the constitutionality of the statute, ruling instead that the government had the burden of proving the voluntariness of service in the foreign armed force by clear, convincing and unequivocal evidence once the issue of duress had been injected into the case by the citizenship-claimint. The court ruled that the government had not sustained its burden in this case, stating:

The Government makes its case simply by proving the objective expatriating act. But here petitioner showed he was conscripted in a totalitarian country to whose conscription law, with its penal sanctions he was subject. This adequately injected the issue of voluntariness and required the Government to sustain its burden of proving voluntary conduct by clear, convincing and unequivocal evidence. The Government has not sustained that burden on this record. The fact that petitioner made no protest and did not seek aid of merican officials -- efforts that, for all that appears, would have been in vain -- does not satisfy the requisite standard of proof. ... The Covernment's only affirmative evidence was that petitioner went to Japan at a time when he was subject to conscription.

The state of the second comments of the secon

A concurring opinion of Mr. Justice Black, joine in by Mr. Justice Douglas, expounded their bolief once again that Congress had no power to expatriate. To opined

"Although Congress can enact live punishing those who shirk their duties as citizens or those who jeopardize our relations with foreign countries it cannot involuntarily expatriate are citizen."73 decision, Justices Frankfurter and Burton declared that normally, an individual should have the burden of proving his state of mind, since he 'is peculiarly equipped to clarify an ambiguity in the meaning of outward events." They felt, however, that where conduct is performed by command of a penal law of a country to which he is subject, the government should be charged with proof that the citizen's conduct was not in response to that command, but was the result of his own direction.

In dissent in Nishikawa, Justices Tarlan and Clark expressed the belief that the majority had imposed a "well-nigh impossible task" upon the government in requiring it to prove that the expatriating conduct was voluntary by "clear, convincing and unequivocal evidence". Since the operative facts were peculiarly within the possession of the citizenship-claimant, they felt that he should be required to show involuntariness. The dissenting Justices also felt that the issue of constitutionality was foreclosed by Perez, and disagreed with the emphasis placed by the majority upon conscription:

"To permit conscription without more to establish duress unjustifiably limits, if it does not largely nullify, the mandate of $401(c). By excupting from the reach of the statute all those serving in foreign armies as to whom no more has been shown than their conscription, the Court is attributing to Congress the intention to permit many Americans who served in such armies to do so with impunity. There is no solid basis for such a restrictive interpretation. By the time the Nationality of 1940 was passed, conscription and not voluntary en-listment had become the usual method of raising armies throughout the world, and it can hardly be doubted that Congress was aware of this fact. In view of this background it is farfetched to assume that Congress intended the result reached by the Court, a result plainly inconsistent with the even-handed administration of $401(c). Moreover, the very terms of the section, which refer to both 'entering' and 'serving in' foreign armed forges, are at odds with such an intention. "75

Five years after the decisions in Perez, Trop and Sishikawa, the Supreme Court again dealt with the expetriation statutes in Mennedy v. Mendows-Lartines. This case involved lection 349(a)(10) of the 1952 lct, 77 prescribing expetriation for departing or remaining outside the jurisdiction of the Inited States in various or in time of national energency for the purposes of evading or avoiding military training and service. Failure to comply with any of the compulsory service laws was statutorally declared to raise the presumption that departure or absence from the United States was for the purpose of evading or avoiding military training and service. In another 5 to 4 decision, Nr. Justice Goldberg, speaking for the Court, held that the provision was plainly intended to be punitive and, as such, was unconstitutional since it failed to provide for the procedural safeguards of due process guaranteed by the Fifth and Sixth mendments. In a concurring opinion, Justices Douglas and Black reiterated their view that Congress has no power to deprive a person of his citizenship.

Dissenting in Hendoza-Marinez, Tr. Justice Steart, with Mr. Justice Thite concurring, argued that loss of citizenship was not punishment in the constitutional sense, but did find invalid the provision of the statute governing the raising of a presumption of intent. In a separate dissent, Mr. Justice Warlan, joined by Mr. Justice Clark, found the statute constitutional.

The next case before the Supreme Court concerning the expatriation provisions of the Emmigration and Mationality at was that of Schneider v. Rush, 78 decided in 1964. Schneider involved Section 352(a) of the ot, providing for to a of citizenship by a naturalized person having a continuous residence for three years in the territory of the country of his former nationality, or of the country of his place of birth. Mr. Justice Douglas, speaking for a cajority of five Justices, held that the statute was constitutionally invalid since it created an impermissable distinction between native born and naturalized citizens, a discrimination which was violative of due process. Mr. Justice Brennan did not participate in the foliation lecision on the reported ground that his son had been involved in the case as counsel on the District Court level.

On the same day as the Schmider case, an equally divided Supress Court of Firmer the decision of the second Circuit Court of Appeals in S.A. as rel. Mark. V. schmit.

This case involved a native-lone mited state either who was held to have lost his pitizenship by virtue of his service in the Cuban armed forces after the successful conclusion of the Castro revolution.

A result of its inability to obtain a majority view because of the abstention of Mr. Justica Brennan, the evenly divided Court upheld the validity of Section 349(a)(3) of the Act approximation for loss of Thitel States citizenship for manthorized service in the armed forces of a foreign state. In the opinion below, Circuit Julye Aternan stated:

The property of the control of the c

"Marks appeals ... claiming ... that $1461(a)(3) as here applied is unconstitutional in that it imposes a cruel and inhuman /sig/punishment in violation of the Highth Amendment. Although we find great force in the constitutional arguments presented by relator's counsel, we are constrained by the superior authority of Perez v. Drownell, 356, U.S. 44, 70 G.Ct. 560, 2L.Dd. 2d 603 (1948) /sig/, to affirm the determination of alienage on the opinion of Judge Ceshin, the district judge below, 203 F.Jupp. 389 (1962)."33

The abstention of Mr. Justice Brennan in the Marky case is particularly significant. Thile Marks argued that his expatriation would result in cruel and unusual punishment (presumably because it would make him a stateless person) in violation of the Nighth Amendment, a position which was sustained in the plurality opinion in Trop v. Dulles, supra. it should be recalled that Mr. Justice Brennan swung the balance in that case by concurring on the ground that the statute in question lacked a rational nexus with Congress' war powers. Nonetheless, in Trop, he uphald the power of Congress to expatriate. In Kennedy v. Mendoga-Martinez, guora, Mr. Justice Brennan indicated in his concurring opinion that he had "some felt doubts of the correctness of Perez, which I joined." He further indicated his belief that the Court had never acknowledged Congression power to expatriate "except where its exercise was intrinsically and peculiarly appropriate to the solution of serious problems inevitably implicating nationality."85 Whether Justice Brennan would have joined a majority in Marks upholding Congressional power to expatriate unwilling citizens on the basis of his prior statements is entirely speculative. In any event, he had apparently adopted the contrary view by the time of the decision in froyin v. Rusk, supra; there he joined in a five man majority comprised of Chief Justice Varren and Justices Black, Douglas and Fortas, in addition to himself. He did not file a separate opinion in the case.

with the Afrovia case, the adherents of what has been called "the absolute view" 86 have prevailed in the assult upon the power of Congress to expatriate an unwilling citizen. This view, consistently champloned by Mr. Justices Black and Douglas, holds "that expatriation can result only from the conscious, deliberate action of the citizen in renouncing his citizenship." Without doubt, this most recent enunciation of the law of expatriation by the Supreme Court stands for the proposition that a citizen may only be divested of his citizenship by an unequivocal, intentional act of renunciation on his part; Congress is without power to order the loss. The Citizen's intent is the key: without an expression of that intent to the contrary, citizenship becomes an indelible heritage."

"It has come full circle from the common-law doctrine that allegiance is immutable unless the sovereign ends it, to a conclusion that citizenship is impregnable against any action by the state, unless the citizen wishes to sever the tie."88

tory provision prescribing expatriation for voting in a foreign political election, with its sweeping language Afrovin would, by implication, strike down all other statutory provisions calling for unwilling expatriation for specific acts. Decisive as this language may appear, however, its supporters may have only momentarily gained the day. The long and hard-fought debates over the Congressional power illustrate that the "absolute view" does not have universal acceptance in judicial opinion. The change in the composition of the Supreme Court could foretell a different result. Significant for what future decisions may hold is the fact that of the five man majority in Ifrovin, only three remain on the high bench.

the same of the sa

- III ffect of from y. n.i. on lost of mile lift.
  through lotuntery introne and dervice in Large a
  - rosion of the Constitutional Dasis of Section 349(a)(3) of the Imagration and Wattonality of of 1952

In froyin, the decision of the Jurime Court was confined to the resolution of the actual case and controvery before it. Beyond that they could not so. Ithough the majority opinion of Mr. Justice Black did not specifically state that Section 401(e) of the 1940 let 90 was unconstitutional, the opinion did state, "Perez v. Brownell is over-ruled." Perez had ruled that Section 401(e) was constitutional. Thile constitutional issues are normally resolved in specific language, the specific overruling of Perez does effectively declare the statutory provision to be unconstitutional. As the law now stands, that issue may be deemed resolved.

a more difficult question is presented. That question is,
"That is the effect of ifrevin on other subparagraphs of Section 349(a) which have not yet been ruled unconstitutional by the supreme Court?" These statutory provisions putativel still stand as law. Nevertheless, the sweeping language of ifrovin v. Ruck, supra, clearly reveals the supreme Court's negation of the power of Congress to prescribe prounds for expatriation; inasmuch as the Constitution has not seedifically

STATE AND DESCRIPTION

The second secon

The Department of the contract of the contract

it is a power reserved to the weeple under the Teach and ent. By implication, then, all other provisions of the loss of nationality statute are struck down on the basis of annumental lack of power in Congress, saving only these movisions concerning expatriating acts which clearly reveal an intention to divest oneself of citizenship.

Such a defect certainly extends to dection 347(a)(3) of the 1952 et, prescribing the loss of citizenship for unauthorized entrance and service in the armed forces of a foreign country. Considered in light of the Supreme Court's councilation of the law in ifrovin, such a provision would patently appear to be constitutionally unenforceable. It is this interpretation which has so alienated the reb nations from the United States in view of the service of some United States citizens in the armed forces of Israel. Not, as will be discussed below, an act of Congress may not be held to be unconstitutional by implication. To strike down the expressed will of Congress by the extension of what purports to be a general principle (albeit it may indeed be a logical extension), fails to accord the legislative power adequate deference as a coordinate branch of government under the Constitution.

B. Attorney General's Opinion on the Offect of Troys

On 18 January 1969, Mr. Hamsey Clark, than thorney General of the United States, is used an attorney General to

The state of the s

Commence of the Commence of th

pinion concerning the effect of Afrovin on the v lidity of expatriation provisions, other than those relating to voting, in the Immigration and Nationality 1ct of 1952. 92 The opinion fails to indicate a complete appreciation of the Court's decision in Afroyim -- that Congress lacks the power to expatriate an unwilling citizen, and that citizenship may only be lost through an intentional relinquishment of it. It dwells, instead, on what acts may be held to constitute a "voluntary relinguishment" of citizenship: such 'voluntary relinguishment" was defined as not limited to written renunciation, but could include acts in derogation of allegiance which are declared expatriative. As indicated above, the term voluntary" has been susceptible of a twofold interpretation ("intentional" versus "uncoerced"), and its use does not contribute to clarity in this instance. Thile the ttorney General acknowledged that, "the ultimate determination of the effect of Afroyim is a matter for the courts," 23 the opinion nevertheless purports to rule on the decision's effect for administrative purposes under the authority of section 103(a) of the 1952 Act. St That section of the Immigration and Nationality Act provides that the Attorney Ceneral's ruling on all matters of law under the Act shall be controlling it does not, however, grant the 'ttorney General sower to mass on the constitutionality of statutery provisions on the basis of analogy from prior cases. The opinion stated

"Indeed, froyim does not reach the question of thether it may be possible

THE RESIDENCE AND ADDRESS OF THE PARTY AND ADDRESS OF THE PARTY. FOR DESCRIPTION OF THE PARTY OF and the second s the second of th The second section and the second section of the second section of the second section the real name of the last the The second section is a second second section of the second secon profile a land out of the court all a great or an arrangement of the state of Manufacture and the second sec AND DESCRIPTION OF THE PARTY AND ADDRESS OF TH

'under some circumstances for alle iance to be transferred or abandoned without constituting a voluntary relinquishment of the status of citizenship. That question must await further court decisions. Under any reading of froying, lowever, it is clear that an act which does not reasonably manifest an individual's transfer or abandonment of allegiance to the "nited States against be made a basis for expatriation."

Unlistment in the armed forces of an "allied country" was characterized as "not necessarily" evidence of an intent to abandon Thited States citizenship. Thus, it remains open for administrative authorities to make a case by case determination as to whether an individual has "voluntarily relinquished" his citizenship, bearing in mind that voluntary relinquishment is not limited to written renunciation but may be manifested by actions deemed expatriative under the Act if they are in derogation of allegiance to the Thited States. It may be suggested that while this directive stops short of rendering an act of Congress totally numetary through mere implication (e.g., Section 344(a)(3)), it fails to appreciate the full import of ifravia, which was a ionial of the Congressional power to legislate donationalization.

C. Department of State Position on the Effect of Afrovin V. Dust

A position on the effect of Afroyin akin to that of the ttorney General was announced by the T.S. Department of State in a statement which was circulated as an official document in the United Nations by the Permanent Representative of the Inited States on 20 Sctober 1989. This statement, will condemning Section 349(a)(3) by implication, does rever a more precise appreciation of ifrorim

"Our laws concerning the circumstances under which imericans may lose their United States citizenship are interpreted by the courts as cases come before them. Tach individual case must be considered and decided on its merits. This is especially true because recent decisions of the United States courts have held that United States citizenship is not automatically lost by performance of certain acts, such as serving in a foreign army. Loss depends largely on the intent of the individual."??

The statement was circulated in response to allegations made by the Fermanent Representative of the United Arab Republic to the United Nations:

"I have learned with great concern and astonishment of the official declarations made by the United States Imbassy in Tel Aviv revealing that United States citizens could maintain their American nationality even if they become citizens of Israel and enlist in its armed forces. This means that American citizens can have double allegiance to Israel and the Mited States and that they can take part in military aggressive acts which Israel countries.

The United States, which has continued giving its political, economic and military aid to Israel following its appression against the Trab countries on June 1967, commence today a new phase in its assistance to Israel through the joining of American citizens in Israeli armst forces. Consequently, the inited States is contributing to the aggressive ver which is being launched by Israel against the Trab countries, a method which does not differ much from the method by which the United States began its war in Viet-12. This

the state of the s

And the second section is a second section of the second section secti have perfect property and the same

THE REAL PROPERTY AND ADDRESS OF THE PERSON NAMED IN COLUMN 2 IN C

At anthrost out to the same of the same of

'new development represents a phase which is fraught with great danger and which undermines the endeavours aiming at the realization of a peaceful settlement within the 'hited Mations.

The Thit States, which placed its support of Security Council resolution 32 (1967) of 22 Toverbor 1967, is enjoying as present in underwining that resolution of endangering sease through providing Israel with arms and planes and enjoying merican citizens to take arms under the Israeli flag against the Arab people. 1969

Countering this charge, the Inited States Servenent Representative stated in his circulated release

"I want to make it perfectly clear that the speculation that the United States Government is somehow encouraging Wericans to serve in any foreign armed force is absolutely without foundation. ... imericans residing abroad in Aurone, the Middle Lot and else here may be subject to induction for military service depending on the laws of the particular country in which they are living. If they heppen to have dual citiz n hir, other oblig tion may be involved. 'e ourselve druft in alien who save in resident aliens. our armed forces foes not autom tically become a citiz no the lot of becoming o edtizen is a clerk's separate act, and our view on the libertion of teriornal disease reflects this same idea. The more fact of military service in a foreign ray, be it Pritich, Trench, Jonaphian, Taraeli, Julia, Mexican or any here of ne there for ally relations obtain does not necessarily now loss of merican citizenshio.

I emphysize that Turnel is no gold case: the laws and interpretations on citizenship satters have you religious bility and no country is accorded any special status in this respect.

Escause of the autostic extension of Israeli nationality to Jews entering Israel with an imagrant visa (unless the of Israeli citizenship at time of atry,, a class of dull beriean and Israeli actionals has brown up. In the mat, nost such persons, though liable to military service, were more or less automationally deferred by the Israeli Severment. In the last few years, however, browning numbers have received call-up action and have been oblig d to save, desite letters of assistance from the Imbersy as protest from the individual concerned. To have no information on numbers. "??

This rejection of the allegations and explanation was followed by a Department of State Press Release on 11 November 1969:

"Questions have be a relead in the out for veels regarding the hited at the Government's policy with respect to service by private merican citizens in foreign armed forces.

201 1 2 2 2

The reason that, is a matter of policy, the Department of Itale opposed service in foreign military forces is that much service can raise serious problems for our Government in the conduct of its foreign relations. Service in foreign military forces risks involvement by hitch state citizens in hostilities with countrie with which we are at reace.

Ne recognize that back state has the authority to determine who shall be noticed to its citizenship as all as the power to determine who, within its territories, about be subject to compalsory military a rvice. However, the Department of State hopes that individual foreignable to avoid foreign military service with its attendant rights for the over-all national interest as all as their personal welfare.

The Department of State is actively considering hether there are idditional state that might be taken to support sore fully the policy objective of our Coverment on this matter. "100

the second of the parameter of the second of THE PART AND THE PARTY OF THE PARTY.

These expressions of United Status solicy with regard to service in foreign armed forces by Thited tate: citizen, reveal a certain sense of frustration on the part of derican officials in dealing with a most sensitive problem in for in relations. Thile section 349(a)(3) of the act remains as statutory law, its foundation has been gravely impaired by /frovin, and enforcement of it admittedly has the appearance of futility. This attitude is evidenced in the state Desartment releases which appear to concede that the statutory prohibition of foreign military service is unconstitutional and, therefore, unenforceable. In this respect the tate Department goes beyond the position asserted by the storney General in his Opinion, which required a case by case determination of voluntary relinquishment of citizenship on the basis of acts in derogation of allegiance to the nited states. this extent, the positions of two spokesmen of the executive branch of government are inconsistent. Thile the State Wartment approach does not contribute to the allaying of Trab apprehensions concerning United States intentions vis a vis Israel, it does, nevertheless, represent what is perhaps a more accurate reading of what Afrovia actually held.

D Arab Miseonosptions on the Basis of Trovin v. Aust

Coupled with the apparent unvillingness of the mitted tates Government to enforce Testion 34/(a)(3) of the Frigration and Nationality Act, there is a profound misunderstanding

the same of the sa

AND RESIDENCE OF THE PARTY OF T

on the 17t of rab governments of the current build the decision in Afrovin v. Just. Contrary to rab allegations that the case reversed prior Thit i Status law in order to permit vericon citizens to fight on the sile of Itraci, ifroving was concerned solely with fundamental constitutional issues and was decided in an arena which bull hold foreign policy considerations to be extraneous to the determination of such issues. Far from being intended as an encouragement for United States citizens to join Israell aroud forces, the case represents, instead, the current prevalence of one viewpoint in a long debate in the Supreme Court over the out int of Federal legislative power. With regard to the Internation and Wationality Act, this delute begon with the dispost of Justices Disch and Douglas in Paris v. Tryngli, . word. " o peregrinations of this debate have been outlined elever it is possible to observe how the the of ste view grand dierents among the Jurtices of the Gurrous Court antil it was able, finally, to com and a bure majority in from in.

of the Pederal legislative power. Under the mitted states Constitution the powers of the Pederal Covernment are specifically delegated; those powers not delegated, nor prohibited to the States by the Constitution, are reserved to the States or to the people under the Tenth Amendment. It is true that the Constitution does not specifically grant to the Tenth Government the power to determine the grounds on which a citizen may be expatriated; yet it is equally true that certain powers are inherent in the rederal Government as the voice of a sovereign nation in the world community of sovereign nations. One of these inherent powers is, indeed, the power to regulate foreign relations. This the history of Constitutional development in the Thit dotters has been one of expansion of power in the Tederal area, each step in this expansion has been accompanied by deliberation and deb to --some of it controversial. So it is in the case of Tederal legislation of expatriation.

In determining an issue of constitutional law the Justices of the Supreme Court are called upon to interpret the language and purposes of that fundamental law in arriving at what they conceive to be its dictates. If, in the opinion of a majority of Justices, an act of Congress contravenes the principles of the Constitution, that act must be invalidated.

The right to declare a law unconstitutional arises because an act of Congress relied upon by one or the other of such /adverse litigants parties in determining their rights is in conflict with the fundamental law. The exercise of this, the most important and delicate duty of this court, is not given to it as a body with revisory power over the action of Congress, but because the rights of the litigants in justiciable controversies require the court to choose between the fundamental law and a law purporting to be of and Lord Disk Street To see a contract of

And the control of th

"enacted within constitutional authority, but in fact beyond the jover delegated to the legislative branch of the government."101

In declaring an act of Congress unconstitutional, it is not controlling upon the Supreme Court that the act in question was prompted by reasons of great merit or not. The foreign policy implications are extraneous to the issue when confronted with a constitutional prohibition of Federal power. When Federal power is found to be lacking in a certain area, the Necessary and Proper Clause perforce has no field within which it can operate in that area. It is this aspect of the decision in Afrovim v. Rush which has been misconstrued by the Arab nations.

differ markedly as to the mandates of the Constitution as applied to the reach of Pederal legislative power. The contest over the Federal power to legislate entatriation so illustrates. In an area of law as open to interpretation as expatriation has proven to be, the comment of Mr. Justice Larlan, that the decision in Afrovia represents 'little more ... then the present majority's own distaste for the expatriation power, strikes a note of particular validity. The divergences which occur, however, represent differing concepts of our fundamental law and the social compact upon which it is founded; they do not reflect a choice of differing foreign policy goals.

IV Public International Law and the ithdrawd of Mationality by a milateral at of state

A. Customary International Law

Withdrawal of nationality by the unilateral act of a State, and resultant statelessness, is a well known occurrence in public international law. The right to deprive a person of its nationality is a right which inheres in a State by virtue of its sovereignty and exists virtually untrammelled. Expatriation in the sense of loss of citizenship existed in Roman law in connection with the penal measures of banishment and deportation; in the mineteentl century deprivation of nationality was most commonly associated with penal measures as a consequence of conviction for certain crimes. 103 It present, on a comparative basis it is possible to discern various grounds for denationalization and modes of effectuating it which are common to many systems of municipal law; there is, however, no uniform practice in this regard.

"A number of grounds for denationalization have been created which are common to many systems, although one cannot speak of uniform legislation. Moreover, legislation varies from country to country as to whether loss of nationality results automatically, by operation of law, from a certain act or conduct (which may also consist of an omission, e.g., failure to register with a diplomatic or consular representative), or whether a decision by a judicial or administrative authority is required. Tithin different States the low

"varies to the extent of providing for automatic loss of nationality on certain grounds (for instance, entry into foreign military service) and for deprivation by an individual act of State only on other grounds (such as disloyal conduct)."10+

The existence of this power of unilateral withdrawal of nationality by a State naturally gives rise to the socotre of statelessness, which has particularly distasteful and surious consequences in cases of mass denationalization. Each a mass denationalization occurred following the Aussian Bolshevik Revolution when Soviet legislation provided for the loss of nationality by nationals residing abroad who had opposed, or who were considered as opposed, to the ner regime. Similar mass denationalization occurred as the result of the racial policies of Wazi Germany when Jerman Jews residing abroad were deprived of their nationality by virtue of a 1941 ordinance. The decisions of municipal courts as to whether such foreign denationalizations will be given effect within their jurisdictions have been varied; in some instances a determinative criterion has been whether the forum state has recognized the expatriating state. 105

In Great Britain and the hited States, statelessness as a result of denstionalization appears to be recognized.

In the case of Stoech v. Public Trustee, The British Chancery Division held that a former Prusulan national, the had obtained discharge of his Prussian nationality, had resided in Ingland without obtaining naturalization, and who, after deportation in 1913, returned to Germany to reside, was not a German national shows property situated in Great Britain was subject to charge under the Order and Treaty of Peace following Yorld Mar I. The Court, per Lord Russell, stated:

"...opon consideration of the arguments addressed to me and the statutory enact-ments before referred to, I hold that the condition of a stateless person is not a condition unrecognized by the municipal law of this country. ... Thether a person is a national of a country must be determined by the municipal law of that country. Upon this I think all text writers are agreed. It would be strange were it otherwise. How could the runicipal law of Uncland determine that a person is a national of Germany It might determine that for the purposes of Inglish municipal law a person shall be deemed to be a national of Germany, or shall be treated as if he were a national of Germany; but that could not constitute him a national of Germany, if he were not such according to the municipal law of Germany. In truth there is not and cannot be such an individual as a German national according to Inglish low-... 11X

In N.S. ex rel. Behaviorations v. Ind 100 the relator, a former Austrian national living in the Faited States, was held not to have acquired German nationality by virtue of Germany's absorption of Austria inasmuch as he was a non-resident of Austria at the time and had never agreed to accept German netionality. As a stateless person, Schwarzkops as not an enemy alien subject to interment under a Thited States statute. The court stated that even if Schwarzkopf had obtained German citizenship by virtue of the annexation, he would have lost it by virtue of the 1941 law den tionalizing Jews living abroad. The court opined further:

The product of the pr

"There is no public policy of this country to proclude an latricen court from recognizing the noter of Germany to disclaim Schwarzhopf as a Cerman citizan. (190

This statement by the leveld Circuit 7.3. Court of Appeals is in line with the dictus of a leading to risen case in the field of actionality and citizenchip -- 1.2.

v. None Rim Arie: 109

"Nor can it be doubted that it is the inherent right of every independent nation to determine for itself, and according to its orn Tenstitution and laws, and classic of persons shall be entitled to its citizenship."110

Primarily sotivated by a desire to avoid the incidence of statelessness, various writers have attempted to establish the existence of rules of international law restricting the right of States to withdraw nationality unilaterally. The evidence of State practice and judicial decision as to the existence of such rules is to the contrary, however.

"It is submitted that the views of those who have tried to establish as a mandatory rule of sticting law dust and containly be regarded as a sound and desirable rule for the future, find no justifies tion in the present state of international law.

The second of th

The second like the second lin the second like the second like the second like the second like

"Neither the view that denationalisation is inconsistent with international law because it creates statelessness nor the view that it encroaches upon the rights of the individual finds support in the rules of international lew. Statelessness is not inadmissible under international law-although it may be considered undesirable. The long-established doctrine that individuals have no rights under the existing law of nations is subject to challenge today, but it can hardly be maintained that there are any rights attributed to individuals by present international law which are infringed by denationalisation as such. The objections raised against loss of nationality by unilateral act of the State only, or even only against denationalisation on specific grounds, are inconsistent also because, for the purpose of judging the admissibility of denationalisation under international law, the methods and grounds of loss of nationality according to municipal law are immaterial. 112

B. International Action Respecting Statelessness

Over the years numerous attempts have been made to create international law governing loss of nationality through the conclusion of bilateral treaties and multilateral conventions on the subject. Of great importance in this regard is the work of the Hague Conference for the Codification of International Law of 1930. Although the Committee on Nationality was unable to formulate any generally recognized principles upon which nationality might be obtained or lost, ll3 the Convention Concerning Certain Questions Relating to the Conflict of Nationality Laws, ll4 and three Protocols thereto, which were adopted at the Conference, generally reflect an effort to eliminate or reduce the occurrence of statelessness. Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention, nevertheless, concede the traditional right of a State to determine its own nationals. The shile upholding this traditional right, the Conference was nonetheless aware of the difficulties which unilateral State action with regard to nationality questions could create, and, in the Final act of the Majur Conference, Sections I-VIII (13 March-12 April 1930), the following recommendation was made:

the second section of the second section of

T.

"The Conference is unanimously of the opinion that it is very desirable That States should, in the exercise of their power of regulating questions of nationality, make every effort to reduce so far as possible cases of statelessness.

Ind that the League of Nations should continue the work which it has already undertaken for the purpose of arriving at an international settlement of this important matter."117

No action was taken pursuant to this recommendation by the League of Nations. However, contemporaneous with the drafting of the Universal Declaration of Tunan lights, in 1947 the United Nations Commission on Tunan lights adopted a Resolution on Stateless Persons in which it urged that the United Nations make recommendations to Member States concerning the conclusion of conventions on nationality, and that the United Nations itself give consideration to the least status of stateless persons, particularly their legal and model protection and their documentation. 118 Tollowing this resolution of the Tunan Rights Commission, the United Retions Economic and Cocial Council requested the Recretary—General to undertake a study of statelessness, and, upon receipt of that report, 119 appointed in 14 Hop Cosmittee to prepare a draft resolution on the subject. Accordingly, on 11 August 1950, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 319 BIHI(XI), entitled Resolution on Provisions Relating to the Problem of Statelessness, which, among other recommendations, invited Statelessness, which, among other recommendations, invited Statelessness.

"...to examine sympathetically applications for naturalization submitted by stateless persons habitually resident in their territory and, if necessary, to re-examine their nationality laws with a view to reducing as far as possible the number of cases of statelessness created by the operation of such laws..."

Resolution 319 MITI(XI) further requested the International Law Commission to undertake the preparation of a 'draft international convention or conventions for the elimination of statelessness;" this request was conveyed to the Commission during its third session in 1951. The International Law Conmission had previously selected the topic of "nationality, including statelessness" as a subject for codification at its first session in 1949, but no special priority had been given the project. At its fourth session, in 1952, the Commission The second secon reserve and materials and materials of the first and materials and density to the statement and appears to the statement of t prepared by the Special Rapporteur on the topic, Meal y C.

Madson. Following this discussion the Commission requested the newly appointed Special Rapporteur, Roberto Cordova, to prepare draft conventions on the reduction and on the climination of future statelessness for consideration at its fifth session. Two draft conventions, one on the elimination of future statelessness, and another on the reduction of future statelessness, were adopted by the Commission at the fifth session in 1953, and were transmitted to Governments for comment.

whole, most of these States favored adoption of the principles expressed in the "reduction convention" rather than the "elimination convention", inassuch as the former appeared most consistent with their domestic nationality legislation.

In particular, there was objection to the limitation or denial of a State's right to deprive an individual would thereby be rendered stateless. As stated in the reply from the Termanent Delegation of Australia to the Thited Nations: "It would appear to be cut of the question that a person should be able to escape deprivation solely because he had no other nationality in addition to Australian sitizenship." The Canadian Government states, in a Note from the Jecretary of State for External Affairs dated 1 June 1954: "It is not thought that statelessness should be avoided at all costs and the Canadian Government would be reluctant to abandon its right to deprive disloyal, naturalized citizens of their Canadian nationality by way of penalty." The opinion of the Tayptian Government was set forth in a Note from its Pernanent Delegation to the United Nations:

"The Egyptian Government does not approve of any limitation to be imposed upon its right of deprivation of nationality as a punishment because it considers the State the most competent authority to decide on acts which threaten its internal security or its economic and social structure." 123

The Netherlands Government took exception to what they interpreted as an 'unintended restriction' on the article curtailing or denying a State's right to deprive a person of its nationality, but they did not concur that the right to deprive of nationality, even with resulting statelessness, should be disallowed in all cases:

eventually article 2 in final draft/, the Netherlands Government like vise prefer the second draft / the reduction convention/ as the stringent provision that States are not allowed to deprive their nationals of their nationality by way of pensity, if such deprivation renders them stateless, is qualified by providing that an exception can be made in case such nationals voluntarily enter or continue in the service of a foreign country in disregard of an empress prohibition of their State. Further the

that the expression -- "by my of penalty" implies an unintended restriction of the article; therefore the Government would suggest to delete these words. This also applies to the second draft, as in many countries -- and certainly in the Netherlands -- deprivation of nationality on the ground of entering or continuing in the service of a foreign State is not considered a punitive measure but rather the logical result of the fact that the person concerned as [sig] evinced a degree of loyalty to a foreign State which is incompatible with his original nationality. "124"

In a Note from the United States Mission to the United Nations, dated 20 April 1954, the United States Government expressed its doubts as to the desirability of dealing with the subject of statelessness by international convention.

This attitude was expressed as follows:

"This Government realizes the hardships resulting to many people from statelessness and the importance for Sovernments to amend their laws to eliminate or reduce as far as possible the anount of statelessness which results from the operation of such laws. Lowever, there is a question whether such elimination or reduction can best be accomplished through the medium of an international convention, concluded within the framework of the United Nations or through appropriate legislative action of individual Governments taken pursuant to a recommendation of some organ of the United Nations. "125"

a State's right to deprive of nationality by way of penalty,

A TABLE OF THE PARTY OF T

the United States Note continued:

"This article, as it appears in either convention, is inconsistent with nit States laws, which in several instances provide for deprivation of nationality "by way of penalty", regardless of whether such deprivation renders the individual stateless. .s em ples, there say be cited treason, desertion and draft evasion. "ith regard to the second paragraph of article 7 in the draft Convention on the Reduction of Muture Statelessness, there is nothing in Thited States low which requires a judicial pronouncement before notionality is lost, although procedures have been established whereby persons who have been held administratively to have lost nationality may have the administrative determination reviewed by the courts. 121

as examples of grounds giving rise to degrivation of nationality by way of penalty, the United States Icaves unsweifted the status of the seven other grounds for loss of nationality under Section 349(a) of the Impiration and Nationality of of 1952.127 It may indeed be said that these seven grounds, among them unauthorized service in a foreign armed force and voting in a foreign political election, 129 do not constitute deprivation of nationality as a penalty, but, rather, simply ascribe certain consequences logically following unon certain acts, committed without coercion by a citizen, which indicate less than a complete allegiance to the hited States. (A distinguishing factor between the three stated grounds and the remaining seven is that treason, desertion and draft

THE PERSON NAMED IN COLUMN TWO IS NOT THE OWNER, THE PERSON NAMED IN COLUMN TWO IS NOT THE OWNER, THE PERSON NAMED IN COLUMN TWO IS NOT THE OWNER, THE PERSON NAMED IN COLUMN TO THE OWNER, THE OWNER,

The design of common property of the contract of the contract evasion are all offenses proscribed and punished under other statutory provisions — and the imposition of loss of nationality constitutes an additional "punishment" for the offense. The remaining seven grounds under Section 349(a) do not give rise or relate to any criminal conduct.) Therefore, those seven grounds for loss of nationality fails can be construed as not constituting a pensity would fall outside the limitation imposed on a State's authority to expatriate by Article 7 of the draft convention. Inder such an interpretation, the United States would retain its power to expatriate an invaliding national by unilateral action. It was just such a "loophole" which the Netherlands Sovernment sought to avoid by its proposal to delete the words "by way of penalty".

Commission discussed the observations of Covernments and redrafted some of the articles of both the elimination and the reduction conventions on the basis of their comments.

In keeping with its essential purpose, the proposed draft for the Convention on the Flimination of Future Statelessness forbade the deprivation of nationality by a State, "by many of penalty or on any other ground", whenever such action would result in an individual becoming stateless.

The draft Convention on the Reduction of Trure person of his nationality because of residence in his country of origin for a period specified by the law of the naturalizing State, and also permitted the denationalization of any nationals who voluntarily entered or continued "in the service of a foreign country in disregard of an express prohibition of their State." Deprivation of nationality "by way of penalty or on any other ground" was prohibited then statelessness would result except in the two specified instances. 130 the reduction convention while others had expressed no preference, the Commission decided to submit both draft conventions to the General Assembly in order that that body could determine whether preference should be given to one or the other. The drafts were discussed in the General Assembly's Sixth (Legal) Committee during the 1954 Dession. The Committee determined that "the time was not ripe" to discuss the substance of the conventions, and that the positions of Member States on the matter were not sufficiently ascertained. On the basis of the dixth Committee's Report, the General Assembly, by Resolution 396 (IX) of 4 December 1954, expressed a desire for the convening of an international conference for the purpose of concluding a convention on either the reduction or the elimination of future statelessness as soon as twenty States communicated to the Secretary-Seneral their willingness to co-operate in such a conference. 131

After the lapse of almost five years, the bited Nations Conference on the Tlimination or Reduction of uture Statelessness convened at Geneva from 24 March to 18 pril 1959 with thirty five States participating. The Conference adopted the International Law Commission's draft Convention on the Reduction of Puture Statelessness as the basis for its discussions and formulated provisions for the reduction of statelessness at birth. There was no agreement, however, as to the limitation on the freedom of States to deprive individuals of their nationality in cases where to do so would render them stateless. Accordingly, the Conference reconvened in New York from 15 to 28 August 1961, with the participation of thirty States, and adopted a Convention on the Reduction of Statelessness. The Convention was opened for signature from 30 August 1961 to 31 May 1962, and will enter force two years after the date of the deposit of the sixth in trument of ratification or accession with the Secretary-General. 132 The Convention has not yet come into force. 133 article 9 of the Convention prohibits in broad terms the deprivation of nationality on "racial, ethnic, religious or political grounds"; however, it is article 8 which deels essentially with the right of a State to deprive a person of its nationality. Such a right is retained by a State on greatly narrowed grounds.

LANGUAGO DE LA PROPERTICIO DEL PROPERTICIO DE LA PROPERTICIO DE LA PROPERTICIO DE LA PROPERTICIO DEL PROPERTICIO

After the Land of Square 1711 more than the field of LEVEL III at the second to the second state of THE REAL PROPERTY STREET, MINISTER, managed that restained to he bearing to be because AND THE REST OF THE PERSON NAMED IN COLUMN 2 AND POST OFFI AND mirrored and and contrativent boundaries has prepared and recovery processing an east small collect its recoverdance to -il committee or regard to private our or outstarted and or an Allow on plant remise assist at the little which the attention in became a contract of relative medically the Calledge and palment and the state of t make the party of the second of the party of THE RESERVE AND PARTY AND ADDRESS OF THE PARTY AND ADDRESS OF THE PARTY. to handware again, our to directly out the good against which CONTRACTOR OF THE PARTY OF THE and the property of the same and the same and the same of the same - when to prince the best were been all will be self-record Calmines bedding an autoble collins (Direct or print Married 10 In Arthred Street, which would would all 51 personal a state of the second s Commercial Secretaria Schools on the Control of the Control of the Park

.rt'ol C

1. A Contracting State shall not deprive a person of its nationality if such deprivation would render him statuless.
2. Notwithstanding the providing of magraph 1 of this article a person may be deprived of the nationality of a Contracting State.

(a) in the circultance in which, under par graphs 4 and 5 of rticle 7, it is permissible that a person should lose his nationality

(b) where the nationality has been obtained by misrepresentation or fraud.

3. Notwithstanding the provision of paragraph 1 of this Article, a Contracting of te may retain the right to despite a person of his nationality, if at the time of signature, ratification or accession it s edilies its retention of such right on one or more of the following grounds, being grounds wisting in its national lay at that time

(a) that, inconsistently with his duty of loyalty to the Contracting (tate, the person

(i) har, in disregard of an empress prohibition by the Contracting State rendered or continued to render services to, or received or continued to receive emoluments from, another State, or

(ii) has conducted himself in a manner seriously prejudicial to the vital interests of the State

(b) that the person has taken an oath, or rade a formal declaration, of allegiance to another State, or given definite evidence of his determination to repudiate his allegiance to the Contracting State.

4. A Contracting State chall not exercise: power of deprivation permitted by paragraphs 2 or 3 of this Article except in occordance with law, which shall provide for the a room concerned the right to a fair hearing by a court or other independent body. "13"

Then, and if, the Convention on the Meduction of Street Lessness does enter into force, its provision, will represent

It who to so up on high out in will make MALE SALVES AND LAND AND ADDRESS OF THE PARTY. publication and determine the contraction of the co eraint Diffs all or failed by A THE RESERVE AND ADDRESS OF THE PARTY OF TH to be a larger of the Albert street, and freeze, and by State Pertian with regard to quanties of withdrawal of nationality. In mentioned heretofort, sustonery international law imposes no effective limitations on the freedom of action of States in matters affecting withdrawal of their nationality. However, even if the hited states should ratify the processed Convention, certainly Section 34 (a)(3) of the Irmigration and Nationality 1ct, forbidding unauthorized service in foreign armed forces, would fall within the exception provided in Article 8, paragraph 3(a)(i).

The Privary Decl. ration of Human I' this and him

A. Historical Davelogment

Article 15 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights enunciates a right to a nationality

"l. Lveryone has the right to a nationality.

2. No one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his nationality nor denied the right to change his nationality. "135

This Declaration, adopted by resolution of the Thited Nations General Assembly on 10 December 1940, stands forth as a pronouncement of basic human rights and freedoms which surves as a standard of achievement for all nations. 136 Thile not a binding international agreement or a codification of existing international law, the Thiversal Declaration possesses a moral force in the world at large which grows in strength whenever reference is made to its terms as a source of inspirution or guidance. Such occasions have been frequent since 1943.

In proclaiming as a standard the right of "everyone" to have a nationality the Universal Declaration seeks to lessen the human suffering - or at a minimum, the hardship - which confronts those persons who must exist without the protection of any State and who may enjoy rights and privileges only at sufference in the country where they are sojourning. Under

THE RESERVE THE PARTY OF THE PA

IN CASO IN CASO AL

AND TO AND PROPERTY OF THE PARTY OF T

particle and the material of memory of memory and the state of the sta

The property is not been all the beautiful to a probability of the series of the serie subjects of international law, since it is only a "total which has capacity to sue in an international tribunal or which has the power to protest through diplomatic charmels."

Thile these traditional concepts have been challenged in the modern age by a more inclusive view of the participants in international law, 13° the tie of nationality remains the foremost protection for the individual in the international arena.

lessness have befallen the individual through no fault of bill own - either he has been rendered stateless by political vicissitudes, or by the happenstance of the place of his birth and of his parentage. Classically, nationally at birth has been determined on the basis of the place of hirth - a territorial concept, the his soli, or on the basis of the national attack of his parents - a personality concept, the his solid or on the basis of the national attack of his sanguings exclusively, of parents whose national state. There exclusively to the jus soli, would be stateless.

Yet, in enunciating the right of an individual to love a nationality the hiversal Declaration does not call for the denial of the right of a State to denationalize. Foregrad 2 of Irticle 15, which qualifies para raph 1, requires only them.

"No one shall be arbitrarily decrived of his mathematics..."

(emphasis supplied) in examination of the background of the adoption of this language will be necessary for an adaquate appraisal of its significance.

In the Preface to his book, an International fill of the Rights of Man, Sir Hersch Lauterpacht expressed his conviction that there existed an impirically demonstrated need for a declaration of the fundamental rights of man 'In the course of the second World ar 'the enthronement of the rights of man' was repeatedly declared to constitute one of the major purposes of the war. The great contest, in which the spiritual heritage of civilization found itself in mortal danger, was imposed upon the world by a power who e very essence lay in the denial of the rights of man as a minst the omnipotence of the State. That fart added weight to the conviction that an international declar tion and protection of the fundamental rights of man must be an integral part of any rational school of world order. However, the idea of an International Bill of the Rights of Han is more than a vital part of the structure of peace. It is empressive of an ebiding problem of all law and government. Go long as that problem remains unsolved, it will continue to be both topical and urgent long after declarations of war and peace aims have become a matter of mere historical interest and after the effective elimination of war has become a reality. But it is a problem which cannot be solved except within the framework and under the shelter of the positive law of an organ-ized Society of States."13.

Recognizing the need for a statement in ter s of ocitive law acknowledging human rights and fundemental frodom, if one and the parameter of the same of the first or extrapolated and the section of the same of

The same of the sa

The second section and the contract

The second secon

of the objects of the Organization of the Thited Tations, as contained in the Dumbarton Oa's Proposals, was to be fulfilled, Lauterpacht formulated an International Bill of the Rights of Man. Article 8 of this International Till conferred a right to a nationality:

"Every person shall be entitled to the nationality of the State where he is born unless and until on attaining majority he declares for the nationality open to him by virtue of descent. No person shall be deprived of his nationality by way of punishment or deemed to have lost his nationality except concurrently with the acquisition of a new nationality." 14-0

The stated aim of this article was to secure a nationality to all persons, and to abolish statelessness as a condition recognized by international and municipal law.

Inasmuch as it is through the State of which he is a notional that an individual obtains the protections and benefits of international law, Lauterpacht cited what he called the "glaring inconsistency" between the prerequisite of nationality and the recognition of statelessness as a condition permitted by international law. While he acknowledged that the abolition of statelessness was of limited importance in comparison with other fundamental human rights, Lauterpacht nonetheless asserted that it was essential to the status of the human personality in both international and municipal law to "do away with that offensive amonaly." In his view,

The place of the control of the cont

'/t/here is no major permanent intere t of it tes in in stands in the way of this much-needed reform. "142 Notivated by a similar appreciation of the human values expressed by Lauterpacht, the First Ression of the Inited Nations Comission on Human Rights established a Drafting Committee in March of 1947 to prepare a statement of human rights and fundamental freedoms. 143 During its First Session, from 9 to 25 June 1047, the Drafting Committee distinguished three objectives for its work: (1) the adoption of a draft international bill of human rights, (2) the adoption of a convention on human rights and (3) the adoption of measures of implementation designed to insure observance of human rights. Also during its First Cession, the Committee considered a Draft Outline of an International Bill of Human Rights of the United Nations Jecretariat. This Draft Outline contained the following provisions relating to a right to a nationality:

"Art. 32. Everyone has the right to a nationality.

Everyone is entitled to the nationality of the State where he is born unless and until on attaining majority he declares for the nationality open to him by virtue of descent.

No one shall be deprived of his nationality by way of punishment or be deemed to have lost his nationality in any other way unless he concurrently acquires a new nationality.

Everyone has the right to renounce the nationality of his birth, or a meviously acquired nationality, upon

When he are order parameters between at legal at the the course of the same of the case of the same of the THE PERSON NAMED AND ADDRESS OF THE PERSON NAMED IN COLUMN 2 ASSESSMENT ASSES with the best of the factor of the second of the property of the second the second and there is demandable, adopt a second, on outside the THE REPORT OF THE PARTY OF THE PARTY OF THE PARTY OF THE PARTY OF THE PARTY. Personal Property of the Property of the Person of the Per north conditions of the party of the party of the party of the country of the said and said and the said and the saverage again. the second like the second like the latter than the second like the second lit is second like the second like the second like the second like facility without more to decorate or people of facilities and part ATTACK A PARTICULAR CONTRACT OF ARTHUR AND ARTHUR AND ARTHUR and the best of the Child Character which we do not have the beginning and large many and a committee of the belief THE RESIDENCE OF REAL PROPERTY AND ADDRESS OF THE PARTY AND ADDRESS OF THE PARTY.

The second secon

A CONTRACT OF THE PARTY OF THE

-modern And to Ameligani of China And an an an analysis of the party o

- IN THE RESERVE AND ADDRESS OF THE PERSON NAMED IN

"acquiring the nationality of another state. 1144

The Drafting Cormittee also considered suggestions for articles to be incorporated in an International Bill of Rights, or amendments to articles already incorporated in the Draft Outline submitted by the Secretariat. With respect to the question of a right to a nationality, the Inited States proposed that Article 32 of the Draft Outline be altered to state simply, "Every person shall have the right to a nationality."

The Representative of France proposed that Article 32 read:

'Every person has the right to a nationality.

It is the duty of the 'nited Nations and Newber States to prevent statelessness as being inconsistent with human rights and the interests of the human community."146

In accordance with the decision to divide its work into the preparation of a bill of human rights (in the nature of a declaration or manifesto), an intermational convention and measures of implementation, the Drafting Counittee appointed working groups to draw up the various provisions. The worksing group on the bill of human rights consisted of the maps sentatives of France, Lebanon and the United Mingdom; it was felt that greater consistency would be achieved if the articles were drawn by one person and the Representative of Trance,

makes the state of the same

a or right of the Table

Professor Rene Cassin, agreed to prepare a proliminary draft.

Professor Cassin's draft consisted of forty-four articles, which were reviewed by the other two members of the vorting group and discussed by the Drafting Committee. On the basis of these discussions, Professor Cassin undertook to revise his draft to incorporate the views expressed by Member States.
This revision was adopted by the Drafting Committee in its report to the Commission on Human Rights as its suggestions for articles to be included in an International Declaration on Human Rights. In this draft, the provision for a right to a nationality appeared as Article 18:

The Drafting Committee expressed the opinion that this article should be considered at greater length as the subject of a Convention. 71147

Thus, from the very definitive ording which would have eliminated statelessness, contained in the Traft Tutline prepared by the Secretariat, the provision for a right to nationality was reduced to a general principle in view of the reductance of States to bind themselves in a matter so traditionally one of their domestic jurisdiction. The draft articles adopted for consideration in an international convention on human rights and fundamental freedoms, which were principly based on submissions by the United Kingdom Representative, Lord Dukeston, 148 contained no provision on the question of nationality. The draft "convention" was a much lore abbreviated door no them the "feether", and removated the minimal area of agreement on which a consensur was some likely.

Commission on Human Rights established three working groups on (1) the declaration, (2) the convention and (3) se gures of implementation, to study the proposels of the Drafting Committee. The working group on the declaration produced a revised Draft International Declaration on Human Rights: in this draft, the right to a nationality became orticle 15:

veryone has the right to an tionality.
Il persons sho do not major the antiquion of any gov rament shall be shaped under the protection of the label of the figure.
The protection shall not be good to eximinate the principles and size of the label leticus.

The Drafting Committee met for it. evend lession in the Opring of 1949, and underto the re-traft of the articles of the Declaration proposed by the Meand Tession of the Mean Lights Commission, taking into consideration the comments of Governments and international organizations to which they had been submitted. The revision of Article 15 dropped the provision for United Mations protection of stateless persons and laft intect only the first centence, i.e., "veryon has the right to a nationality."

[51] Not following this revision of the Persons and Laft to a nationality.

the first sentence:

The cases and procedure of depriving a person of his nationality must be deternined by national legislation. 172

The Third Session of the Cormission on Exman Lights, which met in June of 1940, examined the proposals of the Second Session of the Drafting Committee article by article and adopted a new tent of a Draft International Declaration of Human Rights. The right to a nationality was further altered in this draft, and appeared as Irticle 13:

"No one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his nationality or denied the right to change his nationality." 153

The formulations of the Third Session of the Human Rights Commission were transmitted to the Seventh Session of the Economic and Social Council. In view of the press of time, on 26 August 1948 the Economic and Social Council forwarded the draft as submitted by the Human Rights Councils in to the General Assembly where it was considered in the Third Committee and in Flenary Session.

It is apparent that the drafters of the Declaration recognized the need for a positive statement of a right to a nationality as an abstract principle, particularly to guard against wholesale and arbitrary denationalisation and to counteract the anomaly posed by statelessness in international production are to construct our two constructs as and then are constructed to the construction of the cons have been incongruous on its fact, since certain political rights enunciated in the Declaration require the possession of nationality for their enjoyment. 15th Touver, it is equally apparent that some little for unalling to surpressed their right to legislate fromly with respect to nationality and in some instances to impute denationalization, even when to do so would result in stateleasness. There was no consensus on giving up such a traditional sovereign right as freedom of unilateral action in cases of denationalization. The diversity of opinion on this score can readily be seen in the comments of Member States when the atter was discussed in the Third Committee. 155

AND DESCRIPTION OF THE PARTY OF

Third Committee, consideration was focused on a number of proposed amendments to the text. 156 These amendments reflect the polarity of views held by the nations submitting them. In the one hand, the Soviet Thion sought to strongthen the polarity through an amendment which, in effect, restrictively defined "arbitrary" deprivation of nationality as scrething other than deprivation according to the provisions of national law. 157 On the opposite hand, Trance proposed the positive assertion of a right to a nationality as a first paragraph (thus making the text submitted by the Haman Nights Commission appear

A THE RESIDENCE AND A SECURIT ASSESSMENT AS A SECURIT ASSESSMENT AS A SECURIT AS A SECURITAR AS A SECURIT AS

NAMED OF TAXABLE PARTY OF TAXABLE PARTY OF TAXABLE PARTY.

and the state of the state of the party and the third paragraph which declared that the drited and the special responsibility to revent stately are all that the protect stateless persons. 15% fraguery result it to be word "unjustly" be substituted for "arbitarrily".

pressed disparate views. There was some opposition to definite statement of a right to a nationality on the ground that such an assertion might be interpreted to require the mitted Nations as a body to confer nationality to eliminate any hiatus created by national legislation. Supporters of the amendment denied may such marriand outcomes, legions.

there was a wide range of coinion. The Tellian Representative favored retaining the word 'arbitrarily' since "it did not preclude the possibility of decriving persons of nationality as a sanction in exceptional cases."

If you have a subjective in the word capable of being "interpreted from vary different points of view" and, thus, too "subjective", he favored the word "illegally" as forbidding any action 'taken outside the scope of the law. "161 The Representative of Belivia proposed that the position of the word "arbitrarily" be hiften to modify only the demial of the right to change a tionality. He opined that "deprivation of nationality should not in contemplated in my case stands visitover's and in the tinued, "lationality was an intelligable has a right."

The second secon

Yrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, the decresentative of the "hited states of Prorica, stated that her delegation supported the basic text of rticle 13 which as 'decime to make clear first, that individuals abould not be subjected to action such as was taken during the noti region in Cornery when thousands had been striped of their a clonality in arbitrary government action; and, accordly, that are no should be forced to keep a nationality which he did not went and that he should not therefore be denied the right to change his nationality." Thile the felt that the basic test was best from a practical point of viet, because of the consecution involved in questions of nationality, iro. we seve t indicated that the United States yould not oppose the inclusion of a provision to the effect that everyone had the right to . n -· tionality. She stated that, while she would li' to end, did the Bolivian Representative, that nationality as inclicaable, such an attitude 'harlly seemed realistic." The Duits Itates supported adoption of the word 'arbitrarily', which "implied unexpected, irrespondible action without report for either la or right ad was thus thou a thought them the logally' or the word 'mjust', .163

The United Lingdon le resentativo communità in a vist

The same of the sa

the State of the S - The same of the the facilities will be sent to the first the facilities of the fac with Albert Erreit, and collections are also present that the the first control of the second of Alberta States and THE RESIDENCE IN COLUMN TWO PERSONS ASSESSED FOR PARTY AND PERSONS ASSESSED. the state year age and their sizes are below to be a property and the and the same of th the second of the last the second of the second of the second -the state of the second secon working are of Lincolned and applications of the the partners had not it allows become second the state of the same of the s will be a set out to the second secon and party formation to the formation of the party buildings and the agent was not required to show just one althous being a court of law or before sublict solution. The name of the could solution that, "r. sailor of the level to solution that the factors of a strength were solely within the laternal connectance of a strength that granting or decriving of nationality were severed to prerogatives; in his opinion it was contrary to relate 2, paragraph 7 of the United Sations Charter for the factor to concern itself with such patters. 165

The voting on the amendments of "loverbor 1776, the Third Committee by substantial sejorition." In a setting the condition of the condition of the conditional set of the condition of the conditional set of the conditional set of everyone to a nationality are adopted by a sound to the word 'arbitrarily' to souly only to the right to always one's nationality, and the mandments to suggesting the summer 'unjustly' and 'illegally' for 'arbitrarily', were all usualty' by vide margins. It's residual as jorition. It's the Third Committee by substantial sejorition.

Tollowing the Third Cormittee's adoption of the laditude dual draft articles, a sub-Co. mittee me appointed to study the Declaration as a whole from the point of vice of 'organication's ment, consistency, uniformity and style'. The report of this

The same of the same party and the same of the same of hiversal Declaration of Luman Rights was recommended to the General Assembly on 6 December 1943. In the draft forwarded to the General Assembly, the right to a nationality approved as Article 16 as the result of some re-arrangement by the Sub-Committee. Following discussion by the General Assembly in Plenary Session, votes were taken on each article separately, and thereafter on the Declaration as a whole. To specific mention was made of the nationality article during the Plenary Session.

The right to a nationality, which became Article 15 because of a joinder of two articles by the General Assembly, was adopted unanimously; the vote on the entire inversal Declaration of Luman Rights resulted in its adoption by 16 votes in favor to 0 against, with 8 abstentions.

B. Present and Future Implications of 'rticle 15

In view of the rejection by the Drafting Committee and the Human Rights Commission of the strong, positive language of the Secretariat's Draft Outline which would have climinated statelessness, it cannot be said that the proposed article on the right to a nationality was ever conceived as establishing a standard calling for an absolute prohibition of unilateral denationalization. This some States did indicate a villingness to surrender their exclusive national competence in this area of law, in favor of establishing an international human

And the property of the contract of the contra

"I arrier to architection such that desired all

The property process are planting to advantage at the same of the same and the same rights norm which would deny the right to denstionalize, there was absolutely no consensus on so doing.

as discussed above, the Thiversal Declaration and not intended to be a legally binding international committeent, but was, rather, a standard of achievement toward which nations should aspire. It would be a false conclusion to state that the Universal Declaration leaves unimpaired the traditional international law norm of imposing ne effective limitation on a state's authority over matters concerning loss of its nationality, since it was never deligned to have a direct, operative effect upon international law. Intil such time as the Convention on the Reduction of Statelessness (or some other international convention on nationality) comes into effect, customary international law remains as the legal standard. Of course, even if a convention is adopted it is bin ing only upon the parties thereto, unless in time the normal which it prescribes gain such general acceptanc among nations that they themselves become customary international las, replacing the prior standard.

Jates may measure their orm national legislation, raidle 15 does not call for the renunciation of the power of the language of paragraph 2 of the Inticle, i.e., "To one the second section in the second section in the second section in A STATE OF THE PERSON NAMED IN COLUMN 2 ASSESSMENT ASSE The state of the s PERSONAL PROPERTY. and the state of t PROPERTY OF A PROPERTY OF THE PARTY OF THE P the state of the s term of impaired terms are all more cultifaceables and to make COLUMN TRANSPORT AND THE PARTY OF THE PARTY the first property of the publication of the public the same that the party of the same that the words from a self-side and services and from the property of t wheth it is an an amount of management in the latter property of the paper. AND THE PERSON NAMED IN COLUMN TWO IS NOT THE OWNER.

is not possible to ascribe any precise meaning to the cord "arbitrarily", in view of the disparate interpretations given it in the Third Committee debates. Nevertheless, as can be seen from the rejection of the proposed Soviet meanment which would have so limited its applicability, it would appear that the word does require something more than that an action prescribing denationalization conform to the provisions of national law. Thus, it can be said that the participants in the decision-making process did establish a higher stanker than a mere conformity to law for States exercising the maker to denationalize. This enational law must naturally be observed by State authorities, that law itself must measure up to a standard of justice, right or reasonable modes.

possess a nationality does exist as set forth in the siver. I Declaration as a standard of general aspiration. However, in any appraisal of the right to a nationality on a human right, consideration should be given to its relative importance in the whole spectrum of human rights. In an era when an individual's protection depended upon his possession of a nationality, it was a right of great importance. Instead as attack correctional law, without a country to do battle for his when he was oppressed in foreign lands, the lot of un individual alien could be a sorry one indeed. Theoretically, the stateful individual had 'rights' only at sufference: his fortuned could be disposed of at will if he had not the benefit of diplomatic aid and, ultimately, the opportunity of repairing to his "own" country where he could live in safety.

The property of the control of the property of the control of the

However, as concern for individual human rights and fundamental freedoms has grown in the conscience of the international community, the individual himself has been to rore of a participant in international law.

proclaims that the "ri hts and from does" contained in the Declaration are available to everyon "without discrimination of any kind". They are not limited to the nationals of each particular State. The same concept of miversal applicability has been adopted in regional human rights conventions concluded since the "hiversal Declaration, such as the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freddoms of 4 November 1950, 170 and the merican Convention on Luman Rights of 22 November 1969 (the Pact of San Jose, Costu-Rica). 171 is the fundamental rights of individuals as harm there earn increasingly recognised as a subject of interactional concorn and protection, and the individual himself is recognised as a participant in interactional law, the right to a nationality declines in relative importance. The argument that an individual lacks protection without a national of is writemined by the international protection afrorded him on the basis of human rights. Monetheless, an individual's political rights, such as the right to participate in government, are inevitably tied to mationality. 172 Such substantial human rights as these require protection, and thus the suffdard set forth in rticle 15 of the hiversal Dockmation remains of abiding relevance.

THE PART OF THE PA

tionalization on a massive scale, or for discrimin tory or political purposes it strikes against the poler of an authoritarian state to deny a segment of its people, or certain disfavored individuals, the benefits and privileges afforded to citizens by rendering them stateless. It my also be said that denationalization for ordinar, criminal offenses, readily manishable in other ways, should also find condensation under the inversal Declaration. With respect to the problem of dual nationals, it has been a much that article 15 continuates the possession of any one mention that article 15, paragraph 1 would imply an obligation on the part of all but one of the itstee to give un their claim of rationality. 173

In resolving quoties one making last of a classical to.

promotion to the second second

Wations, on legislative, judicial and administrative levels, must take into consideration the standards contained in the Universal Declaration. One of the purposes of the hited Nations, as set forth in Article 1, paragraph 3 of its Charter, is "Ito achieve international cooperation ... in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all..." In addition, rticle 57 of the Charter states:

"Vith a view to the creation of conditions of stability and well-being which are necessary for peaceful and friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, the 'hited Sations shall promote:

c. universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion."

This undertaking is followed by Article 56 which pledges Members to take affirmative action toward "the achievement of the purposes set forth in Article 55."

Thus, despite the fact that the iniversal Declaration itself lacks the binding force of an international convention, the legal obligations undertaken under the Charter of the Inited Nations make it incumbent on Member Vations to examine their domestic legislation with a view toward determining it conformity with human rights standards.

The state of the s

The has strong to a dispersion of the state of the state

The state of the s

THE PROPERTY OF STATEMENT OF SHIPLE OF THE PROPERTY OF STATEMENT OF ST

AND THE PROPERTY OF THE PARTY O

Such an examination must be made by 'hited "tates decision-makers in any appraisal of Section 349(a)(3) of the Immigration and Nationality (ct of 1952. review of this statutory provision for the loss of Thited States nationality as the result of unauthorized foreign military service reveals that it has a very distinguishing feature from the arbitrary denationalisation condenned by the Universal Declaration. In instances of unauthorized foreign military service the individual citizen brings upon himself the consequences of his own conduct -- sesuring that conduct to be uncoerced. Further, foreign military service by a citizen represents something other than a complete loyalty to his country since he must also bear loyalty to the nation which he serves, even if only temporarily. By serving abroad the citizen may be aiding causes disapproved by his government, or toward which his government may desire to assume a neutral position, thus jeopardizing its conduct of foreign relations. Or indeed, the citizen serving in a foreign armed force may find himself in direct opposition to his own country -possibly inadvertently.

Loss of United States nationality can, and should, function as a deterrent to foreign adventurism through service in other nations' armed forces. In maintaining such a deterrent, the United States conserves its own legitimate values by requilating its manpower resources and in avoiding international discord caused by the actions of its citizens. Internationally, there is no legitimate value to be served by permitting the citizens of the mited States to serve without mathorization in another nation's arred forces, thus contributing to a war-making potential. Individuals who undertake such unauthorized foreign armed service, do so with the realization that the society whose interests they have disregarded no longer desires to claim them as its own. Section 344(a)(3), therefore, should not be condemned as an arbitrary act by the United States, and the Supreme Court in sustaining its enforcement would not be acting contrary to the standard of achievement contained in article 15 of the Iniversal Declaration of Human Rights. 174

The second control of the control of the second control of the sec

The property of the second companies of the property of the second of th

VI Neutrality in the Control of Volunteers

A. Public International Law and Teutral Volunteers

Neutrality has been defined as an attitude of invaratiality adopted by third states to are belligerents which creates rights and duties between the importial States and the belligerents. 175 By virtue of the rights and duties created between subjects of international law, neutrality is regulated by public international law. Considered in its classical sense, the law of neutrality governs solely the activities of States. Is stated by McCalr and Lates.

"It is, strictly speaking, incorrect to speak of a person being neutral, though loosely the term any be used to denote the subject of a neutral it te. 176

The impartiality posited as a criterion must be carried out in conduct. The word "impartiality" itself implies a non-participation on any side of a particular coercion situation. However, "nonparticipation" is not the only implication to be derived from "impartiality": it is also susceptible of being interpreted to mean "treating all alike". It takes but a moment's reflection to see that "nonparticipation" and "treating all alike", when applied to an international conflict situation, are conceptually incompatible. To determine which concept is most useful in discussing neutrality, it is speciment Difference and the Common States of

The property of the property o

necessary to exprine what relies acuteally to be to promote.

From whatever an road, has been add tel, and despite the variety of motives behind those in recolor, it can be seen that the primary value which neutrality has fostered is the prevention or minimization of the spread of war and international violence, and thereby, the avoidence of war's baleful consequences in the destruction of other essential community values, such as human life, economic well-being and security, and so forth. If this onelysis of the printy value fostered by neutrality is accepted as accurate, it will be observed that only the concept of neutrality as 'nonvarticipation" will contribute to its furtherance. . conception of neutrality as 'treating all alile' av succeed in voiding the ire of competing belligerents (withough not always), but it does not advance the cause of prevention or minimization of the spread of war and international violence. If boiligerents may draw on the resources of 'neutrals' equally, the flames of coercion are only fed and the danger of its spread continues to exist.

Thus derived from the term 'impartiality', the wordsymbol "nonparticipation" is more precise than that of "neutrality" and, therefore, more useful in conveying meaning.
Hence, neutrality may be defined as the nonparticipation of at the first and the second second section in parties and personal and the later white outer purple and field page has now the foreign but to additionable to end/employ and all a tree to annual out a property has a market Alanthurselft. I A LANCOUR TO THE STATE OF THE PARTY OF THE the principle will be a principle of the party of the par to be a property of the party o AN ADDRESS OF A PERSONNEL BY THE PARTY OF TH THE RESERVE AND ADDRESS OF THE PARTY OF THE mentioned at the contract of the sales of th the property of the contract of the contract of the contract of materials are an independent to sense our country for most at will be it converted benightened for the large off to and or the same of the same of the same afternoon Course of the woman and the set you are reference to making - / LE ST ASSESSED rarticipation is productive of rights and duties between the nonparticipant state and the individual belligerents.

The delication of the delication of the state of the stat

Nevertheless, because of the abundant use of the word

"neutral" in public international lagal literature and understanding, it will be used occasionally in this paper, but only as an equivalent of "nonparticipant".

Of course, it is in the political arene that the decision is made as to whether or not a State will remain a nonparticipant with respect to a particular interactional coercion situation. Opponheir-Lauterpacht states that there is no duty under international law for a State to remain neutral toward a conflict, unless a prior treaty expressly so provides: 177 however, such an interpretation may be subject to question at the present time in its application to Member-States of the United Nations. In view of the requirement of Article 2(4) of the Charter, 178 that Hembers:

"...refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any state, or in any other manner inconsistent with the Purposes of the Thited Nations."

it is arguable that, unless they may invoke their right of self-defense under Article 51 of the Charter, or their abligation to participate in United Nations collective enforcement measures, Member-States do have a duty under international law international peace. The advent of the 'nited Nations in the international reasonate of the 'nited Nations in the international reasonate in the 'nited Nations calls for collective enforcement reasonate under the Charter, Namber-States have the calligation to reader assistance in conscious with that call. Newber-Itates have the calligation to reader not remain non-articipants in the face of the correction asy not remain non-articipants in the face of the correction community's condemnation of ggr ssion. It cannot be assumed, however, that in all international coercion situations agaression can be determined, the gailt of a particular belligarent identified and that the 'nited Nations can and will the onforcement action. Is summarized by Oppenheim-Lauterpacht:

While the Charter has affected in a decisive way the right of the Vembers of the Thited Wations to remain neutral, it has not substantially abolished their right to neutrality either in wars between Members of the Thited Wations or in wars between non-Members or between Members and non-Members. In principle no Member of the United Nations is Intitled, at its discretion, to remain neutral in a war in which the security Council has found a particular Ctate guilty of a breach of the peace or of an act of aggression and in which it has called upon the Member of the brited Wations concerned either to declare var upon that State or to take rilitary action indistinguish ble from yer. This is the cumulative effect in (rticle 3(5) of the Charter (in which Members under tele to give the United Nations overy assistance in any action it takes in accordance with the Charter): of Article 25 (in high Verhers undertake to accept and to sorply with the "decisions of the Tecurity Council)" and of the provisions of Chapter VII of the Charter in the matter of 'enformment action'. To ever, apart from the precise case referred to above and which, in teneral, leaves no right to or room for neutrality, there that be mavilaged cituations which are clearly consistent with the continued neutrality of the Yenbers of the United Nations. '179

McDowgel and Teliciano surgest that in the absence of a binding decision by the Security Council to take enforcement action, States may look to a resolution of the General Assembly as authorization to '... appraise the lawfulness of each belligerent's cause and accordingly to discriminate in its demands." 180 This view may be overly sanguine for a nation such as the Thited States, however. In an era of super-power confrontation with its attendant risk, political realities may make participation in an international conflict through discrimination on one side an impossibility. Ven if political considerations posed no har, the rights and grange of a particular conflict may not be so clearly discreasible that discrimination would be justified. Hence, the laws of neutrality continue to have relevance in public international law.

The rights and duties of States seeking to remain nonparticipants may be classified generally as those of clastention and of prevention. States must abstain from taking any action which would evince an inclination to render assistance to one

The second secon

same time, nonparticipant states have the duty -- one the right -- to prevent belligorests from an day use of their territory and their resources for all thery purposes viewed by tapenheim-leaturpacks, this daty of a sent on the trace, but also to the transport of trace, or material, and provisions for the troops, the fitting on the trace and privateers, the establishment of Prize Courts, and the like. 181

Schwarzenberger adds a third catagory -- that of acquiesence -- in his summarisation of the rights and dution of neutral powers:

from taking sider in the most lost in assisting either belki pront.

Secondly, a neutral state has both the right and duty to provent has territory from being most by either belligerent as a base for hostil operations.

Thirdly, a neutral State must acquiesce in certain restrictions which belligerents are entitled to impose on peaceful intercourse between its citizens and their enemies, in particular, limitations of the freedom of the seas. 1332

Such traditional views of the rights and duties of neutral powers make a clear distinction between the activities of a State itself in its 'corporate' personality and the activities of a neutral State's individual nationals. The obliquations

The second secon

"... do not extend to spontaneous unneutral activities on the part of its citizens or cornorations entitled to its nationality. These way, at their own rish assist either belligerent." 183 Thus, while a neutral state may not grant loans or supply munitions to belligerents, individual subjects of the nonparticipant state are not so prevented. 184 Thile some "total have sought to climinate friction by ferbidding their nationals to earste in such sativities through domestic legislation, such restrictions are distated by political motives rather than any requirement of customary international law. No ever, do nextic legislation which forbade assistance other than to all belligerents alike would surely violate the duty of abstention in nonparticipation. 185 themselves and the activities of their nationals found sanction in Hague Convention V on the Rights and Duties of Neutral Powers and Persons in War on Land, 186 and in Hague Convention XIII on the Rights and Duties of Neutral Powers in Maval War. 187 Both of these Conventions, which were concluded at the Second Hague Peace Conference of 1907, contain the provision that they "... do not apply except between Contracting Powers, and then only if all the belligerents are parties to the Convention. "188 Because of these "general participation" clauses, the Conventions were not applicable as treatise during gerents were not parties. 189 (The most notable non-party was the United Fingdom. 190) Nevertheless, the Conventions are regarded as an empression of the sustainty international law of neutrality and they have been Instrumently titled in this sense. 191 With respect to the public international law governing neutral "volunteers", it is I gue Convention " which is directly spelicable.

Article 4 of Hague Convention V provides:

"Corps of combatents cannot be formed nor recruiting agencies opened on the territory of a neutral Power to assist the belligerents."

Article 6 of Mague Convention V reflects the distinction between the actions of a neutral State and the actions of individuals:

"The responsibility of a neutral lover is not engaged by the fact of persons crossing the frontier separating to offer their services to one of the belligerents."

Thus, neutral Powers are obliged by Inticle 4 to prevent the organization of volunteer armed forces within their territory for the benefit of a belligerent, including the recruitment of such volunteers, and, by implication of Inticle 6, to prevent the passage from their frontiers of such organized in a body for the purpose of enlisting in the force of a belligerent. Towever, no such duty of prevention erises with to the second se

The second state of the se

respect to the departure of individuals (including their own nationals), whether they be few or many, who leave with the intention of volunteering in the armed forces of a belligerent. The criterion for determination of State responsibility for prevention under customary international law is "organization". The passage of organized volunteers through a nonparticipant's territory takes on the character of the passage of troops, and the act of organizing volunteers on neutral territory is tantament to the formation of a hostile expedition, both of which violate the nonparticipant's duty of prevention. 192 As long as individual volunteers, even those travelling together, do not cross the frontier as a body, the responsibility of a state is not engaged.

Naturally, when numbers of volunteers are involved at one time, or when a consistent rattern of exodus is discernible, the point where individual action ceases and organization begins may be imprecise. Yet it is at this possibly imprecise point that a neutral state must take cognizance of the fact that its territory is being used as a conduit of aid for a belligerent. In some instances, however, governmental complicity is open to little doubt. This issue was contested in whited Nations debates when Communist Chinese forces entered the Lorean Conflict on the side of North Fores. Doubt an for the /them? Communist bloc claimed that the Chinese participants were merely volunteers, and that, even though they individuals. Such an argument was hardly tenable in light of the facts, and in January of 1951 the Security Council condemned Communist China for its aggression. It may be safely said that in any frontier passage of the magnitude of the Communist Chinese invasion, any attempted distinction between individual action and a countenanced hostile expedition (if not an outright attack) is entirely cerebric.

Despite any difficulties in line-drawing, the test of legitimacy of volunteers of nonparticipant nationality has been "individual action", and "... the subjects of neutral states who thus enlist do not thereby commit any offense against the rules of International Law. 104 In practice the United States has adhered to the distinction between individual and organized activity of volunteers. Then imbassador Lamacona of Mexico complained of the arrest of Mexican citizens who were departing the Inited States to take part in revolutionary disturbances in Mexico, Secretary of State Enox stated in the course of his reply:

"Again I should call four Tweellency's attention to the fact that in international law and under the Federal Statutes of this Government a very wide difference exists on the one hand between the passage of mun singly and in small groups across our frontier and into another country, or the sailing of individuals or small groups in the ordinary course of events from one of our ports, and on the other hand the departure from our territory of organized groups of men avowing

The first of the contract of t

"the purpose of undertaking belligerent activities in foreign territory.

In this connection I must atain repeat to Your Excellency that not only is there no rule of international law requiring, and no local Tederal statute that would permit, the Federal officials of this Government to prevent the passage into foreign territory of unarmed and unorganized men either singly or in groups, but on the contrary it is an express provision of international law that the responsibility of a neutral power is not engaged even in time of recognized war by the fact of persons crossing the frontier separately to offer their services to one of the belligerents; and as to the mandates of municipal law, the courts of the United States have repeatedly declared that our neutrality statutes do not forbid one or more individuals singly or in unarmed, unorganized groups from leaving the United States for the purpose of joining in any military operations which are being carried on between other countries or between different parties in the same country. 195

In a communication to the Department of the Mavy of October 23, 1940, relating to the service of United States citizens in the armed forces of foreign States, the Department of State declared:

"Sections 21 and 22 of Title 18, J.J. Code, provide penalties for entry or the hiring of others for entry into the armed forces of a foreign state when such acts are committed within the territory or jurisdiction (not extra-territorial jurisdiction) of the United States, but there is no penalty in the general laws of the United States where citizens of the United States go abroad and while abroad enter the armed forces of a foreign state."196

the second of missions

the state of the same of the s of others within the territory of the Maitel States, ic contained in 18 U.S.C. $950(a):

or enters himself, or hires or retains another to enlist or enter himself, or to go beyond the jurisdiction of the mited states with intent to be audisted or entered in the service of any foreign prince, state, colony, district, or popule as a soldier or and marine or seemen on board any versel of war, letter of marine, or privator, chill be fined not more than 1,000 or imprisoned not more than three years, or both. 1277

Contrary to Oppenheim-Lautemacht's assertion, 12 it is not a crime under United States low for an individual, whether or not a citizen, to depart the country with Intent to enlist in a foreign military service, nor does the law prevent individuals from so doing. Morever, thether or not it was an intentional attempt to fill this histure in hitel States neutrality laws, Section 349(a)(3) of the Indigration and Mationality et of 1952 does direct its thrust against individual foreign military service, although it does not note such conduct criminal.

In the United Tingdom, statutory prohibition of volumteer enlistment in foreign armed forces is contained in the Poreign mlistment Act of 1970. This Act, which is based on a similar statute of 1819, makes it an offense for any writish subject to accept without license of the Gram "... any countrsion or engagement in the military or neval service of any THE COURSE OF A COURSE SHARE AND THE STREET AND ADDRESS OF SERVICE SERVICE AND ADDRESS OF SERVICE SERV

Her Majesty", or to leave the country ith the intent to accept such comission or engagement. It when I wildtions are directly sized at proserving neutrality in international coercion situations size they are dependent in the relations of states of "wer" and "poses". In internation, he ever, the term "war" has a nore inclusive connectation can a strictly defined at the of declared are, and rould entend to hostilities of lesser amonitude. 200 No talks the further view that enlistment in United Nations forces, or in the forces of a State which the inited Nations is advistin, is possibly subject to the senetion provided by the let, along as the State against which they are fighting is at reacce with the Crown. 201 international law, provisions in constitute legislation restricting neutral volunteers do have a significance for the outtonary law in that they represent a trend to and strict form of neutrality. 202 a state by promile:

The customery latin all across to clums, uncertain and infloctive, and it is harly surprise; that it has been codified in various way. The merable municipal provisions would ting and punishing foreign enlist at exist. ...

Such restrictions in corestic legislation indicate a recognition by States of their responsibility for the actions

The term of the control of the property of the state of t

THE PERSON NAMED IN COLUMN TWO IS NOT THE OWNER, THE PERSON NAMED IN COLUMN TWO IS NOT THE OWNER.

their nationals abroad her flame actions are within their control, and an unwillingness to be drawn by their nationals into a position of participation is an international conflict which they might otherwise seek to avoid. In so doing, States enacting these regulations maximize the primary value of nonparticipation in coercion — the prevention or minimization of the spread of war and international violence.

B. The Decline of Governmental Laissez Paire

The "impeccable" 204 distinction made by customary international law between organized groups of volunteers departing a nonparticipant State's territory and individual volunteers departing on an unorganized basis, reflects the conception of a political, economic and social organization prevalent in Western Durope and the United State. in the last century. 205 This conception, most commonly known as laissez faire, placed a premium upon individual initiative -particularly in the economic sphere -- and relegated to governmental activity only those circumscribed functions thought to be appropriate in an era of emerging individualism. Part and parcel of this concept was the view of an international community wherein only States were effective erticipants: thus international relations and responsibilities were the province of Statecraft, outside of which the private sector of society operated freely. It was in such an intellectual

THE REAL PROPERTY IS NOT AN ADDRESS OF

- I be thereday and the second section of the second section is a section of The Date of the Control of the Contr A STATE OF THE PARTY OF THE PAR and the second trade and trade a Committee of the Commit - - I will be desired to the course of the c and the second of the second o and the state of the same of t the second control of the second control of the second control of the the result of the country from and the state of the same of the same Many and a second secon the second residence of the se Control of the Contro climate that the quatorary intermational last of matrellity developed which eventually found embodia not in the English Conventions of 1007.

The political, economic and social developments of the twentieth century, however, have virtually proded the nineteenth century dichotomy between the actions of a State and its individual inhabitants. Observed history and common experience bear witness to the extension of governmental control and regulation into virtually all aspects of life, nost notably the economic aspect. Is donestic and interactional social life becomes more complex it is not to be expected that such governmental influence will decline. Volcoural and Feliciano state:

"Tven in nontotalitarian orders; ... governments contonly exercise enten-sive control over the movements of capital, goods, and services across their boundaries, utilizing a large variety of control techniques and devices, such as exchange controls, tariffs, import quotas, export licensing, bilateral balancing of trade, and the like. In periods of crises and emergency, i.e., of overt violence or high expectations of violence, public control is commonly intensified and broadened such that the private (nongovernmental) entities and individuals involved in an act of exportation or importation may actually be little for than nominal participants. The crucial points are that decisions on the important aspects of foreign trade -- direction, content, volume, financing, and so forth -- are either m de by govern ent official. directly or are subject to their approval and that the private parties in fact international law of neutrality requires a name religional State to prevent the recruitment of volunteers and the nounting of hostile military expeditions in its territory -- and that governmental consistance in the inne, or indifference to overt manifestations thereof, is an international delicat -- there remains the 'curious paradox' 207 of the free ton of action accorded the individual volunteer of nonparticipant nationality. Yet, to continue to insist that a State may remain neutral while its citizens may participate in an international conflict, is to engage in a sophistic niceness which should find no place in present day international law. Brownlie opines:

"Truntian as instrumentaliti of state policy. 106

"With an increase in the definition and comprehensive nature of the citizen's rights and duties vis-a-vis the State, there must be a change in the character of the volunteer." 200

Not only have the presuppositions Aich underlay Article 6 of Mague Convention V practically disappeared with the "integration of the individual in the State corpus", " Dut the vague criteria of the customary law law always been poductive of abuse. Such abuses probably occurred in the formation of the U.S. Magle Squadrons which enlisted in Camada in 1949-1941 and the Flying Tigers formed by Colonel Chemanust in the Sno-

or other party and the same

Japaneze conflict. The results of the control of the control of the control of and article attention in, their activities; but it is only by redefining a property of the control of the c tion in international coercion situations, it may be reasoned that a belligerent has a legitimate claim in demanding that the nonparticipant prevent the utilization of its recourses by the opposing belligerent. Each resources extent be lower ally confined to the territorial and actorial resources of a nonparticipant State, but extend to its huran resources as well. If a nonparticipant State of the columbia fails an exercise its duty of prevention, it can no larger lay claim to manufacture attacks it is longued with the bellig rest of ing the advantage.

one of the legitimate expectations of the peoples of the world is that international society will sook to legitime mar and to minimize the danger of its spread. The makes that in the contraction can be furthered if States recognize responsibility for the private actions of their individual citizens them such actions have an operative effect upon international relations

I -- , make the property of the statement of the statemen

A three of the control of the contro

THE RESERVE AND THE PERSON

the autition of the design below, the right on the self-time of possible of the self-time o and the values which a world willing order acces to forter. The letters which contribute to the sorted of the and feture tional violence should be prevented.

the interests of the world todiety will be adequately served if the Itatos affectively refrain from augmenting the fighting force of the belligerents in an interantional war, or the insurgents in a civil strife, or of an aggressor against whom the world organization takes enforcement action. The force of this suggestion reveals itself with all its cogency if it is considered that international conflagrations have their roots in local conflicts between minor itates or in civil wars apparently confined to the territory of one State. The

It has been suggested that a nonparticipant State's duty of prevention should be extended to prohibition of the exit of volunteers. Abovever, such control of movement would operate as a qualification of cricle 13. Agreement 2, of the Universal Declaration of cases lights, also which provides:

'Everyone has the right to leave on; country, including his own, and to return to his country. 'Ol?'

In addition, the United States, the right to trivel is considered to be an inherent right of every citizen which cannot be denied without compliance with Fifth Imendment due process. To limit this freedom would indeed be odious, and, it is submitted, ineffective in preventing the departure of voluntaers who seek to enlist abroad.

of 'hited States responsibility for the service of citizens in a belligerent foreign armed force can be discerned in Section 349(a)(3) of the Immigration and Mationality et. In making loss of nationality a consequence of unauthorized foreign armed service, the nonparticipant status of the hited States in international coercion situations is not jeopardized. In addition, the individual brings this consequence of his own uncoerced action upon himself. Inforcement of this statutory provision is not only permissable under public international law and international hu an rights standards, as previously considered, but it is in beeping with the increasing recognition of state responsibility in the laws of neutrality which bears a more accurate relation to the actual control exercised over private initiative.

The second property of all the all the entire of a state of

VII Contribution of Israeli Law to the Controversy between the Inited states and rab lations

.. The Israeli Law of Return

Exacerbating the issue of the service of United States citizens in the armed forces of Israel is the effect of the Israeli Law of Return. The law of Return, in conjunction with the Israeli Nationality Law, provides that all Jews have the right to immigrate to Israel, and that all Jews of full age who do so, obtain Israeli nationality unless they declare their desire not to become Israeli nationals upon their entering the country. Under these provisions of law, acquisition of Israeli nationality is not dependent upon renunciation of a prior nationality.<sup>219</sup>

Thus, by operation of law, United States Jews isligrating to Israel for settlement obtain dual nationality — that of Israel and that of the United States — without formal application and regardless of their volition, unless they declare a desire to the contrary. Although the absence of a rejection of Israeli nationality may be recarded as an affirmative indication of a desire to acquire it, this reasoning presupposes knowledge of the operation of the law and its implications on the part of immigrating Jews. 220

The distinctive aspect of Israeli nationality laws as applied to Jews, conferring on them perhaps an unwitting dual

THE RESERVE OF THE PARTY OF THE

- The Property Line of The Color A man for every our to proper to mean them and an every of every perperiod of the series of the series of them and the series of the series of and the Communication of the state of the st

137

the second secon

nationality, can be seen through contrast with Israeli naturalization provisions. Inder these provisions, persons of full age, who do not obtain Israeli nationality under the Law of Return, by birth, or by virtue of being former Palestinian citizens who satisfy certain conditions of residence, may apply for Israeli nationality by naturalization. To obtain naturalization the individual must satisfy conditions of residence and knowledge of the Hebrev language, and must renounce his prior nationality or prove that he will cease to be a foreign national upon his becoming an Israeli national. 221 As a result, all non-Jews who immigrate to Israel and who apply for naturalization avoid obtaining dual nationality; naturalization for them requires an affirmative act of application with the renunciation of prior citizenship. The implications of acquiring Israeli nationality, with a conscious severence of former national ties and acceptance of the obligations of citizenship, should, therefore, be well understood by the non-Jew seeking naturalization. This is not necessarily so in the case of Jews who are given Israeli nationality by the Law of Return.

As Israeli nationals, immigrating Jevs would naturally be subject to all laws of Israel effecting its nationals, including those requiring military service. The Israeli Defense Service Law does make Israeli nationals and permanent residente subject to conscription in the Regular Forces or Reserve Forces the same of the sa THE RESERVE AND ADDRESS OF THE PARTY OF THE returned for the literature and the real control of the terminature and the same property and the same and th many order to sent any or party or proper to sail and and the first of the little beautiful the place was promise and the state of t the second of th the state of the same of the s Company of the Compan the street of the party of the Contract of the the property of the second party of the last last last the second The part of the second second section of the state of the part of property of the second the next section of security privileges to next section and the second residence of the contract period to second sections. workly the of previously shipping printers it is sentinglished the state and finished an advantage of the state of the s A Desirable and the second of makes to sell and plant Mandras

The state of the cost of the cost of the cost in the last the set the set of the cost of t

of the Defense Army of Israel: in the case of males, such liability exists between the ages of eighteen and forty-nine years inclusive, and in the case of females, between eighteen and thirty-eight years inclusive. Males may be called into the Regular Service between the ages of eighteen and twenty-nine years inclusive, and females between eighteen and twenty-six inclusive; in the case of both sexes, the age limits are extended for medical personnel. All persons of military age found fit for service belong to the Reserve Porces when not on regular service. Permanent residents are defined by the Defense Service Law as those persons whose permanent residence is within the territory in which the law of the State of Israel applies, and whose permit of transitory residence, visitor's permit of residence or permit of temporary residence has been expired for six months without renewal. 222

by virtue of these statutory provisions, Inited States citizens who are of military age and who are Israeli nationals or permanent residents, are bound to serve in the Israeli armed forces, regular or reserve. The problem thus posed the United States with regard to its relations with Irab countries is patent. Nor is the problem a de minimus one. Mr. Moshe Rivlin, Director General of the Israeli bsorption Ministry, stated in a speech given in the United States in November 1969, that Israel is experiencing a sharp rise in immigration since the 1969 Arab-Israeli War and that the total number of immigrants

The billion of the common to the common of each processing and the control of the common of the comm

The state of the second control of the second control of the second state of the second control of the second for 1969 was anticipated to be between 50,000 to 60,000.

Lew York Times article reporting fr. Rivlin's speech indicated that Israel's conscription law "... has meant that ore than a hundred Americans have been called up, some of them veterans of Vietnam." 223 The article continued: "Immigration from the United States also has increased sharply since the 1967 Arab-Israeli war. Officials expect 7,000 to 10,000 immigrants from the United States next year." 224

B. The Problem of Dual Wationals

unable to protect its citizens, who are also Israeli nationals, against the requirements of the laws of Israel when such dual nationals are subject to Israeli jurisdiction and have established an effective connection with the State of Israel through settlement there. 225 This principle of customary international law pertaining to dual nationals was codified in the 1930 Magne Convention on Certain Questions Relating to the Conflict of Nationality Laws:

"Art. 4. A State may not afford diplomatic protection to one of its nationals against a State whose nationality such person also possesses." 226

In view of the frequently conflicting obligations which dual nationals owe to the States whose nationalities they possess, and the controversies between States which have arisen from their conflicting claims of personal jurisdiction, the

"Description from the authors' milt at

The second of th

The terminal process of the process of the later of the contract of the contra

Not only is it undesirable for the individual dual national who is subjected to competing demands, but it is also undesirable for the claimant States. The accusations of trab rovernments, that the United States is permitting its citizen to serve in the Israeli armed forces, is an example of the embarrassment to which a nation may be subjected as a result of the recognition of dual nationality in international law. Then 'mited States citizens require obligations to a foreign State through dual nationality, the 'hited States cannot prevent their fulfillment of those obligations when they are subject to that State's jurisdiction.

The retention of a former nationality when an indlvidual has voluntarily acquired an additional nationality, and has established a permanent residence abroad, is an anomaly at variance with the sociological reality that the individual has identified himself with another society and national culture, has assumed the rights and obligations of citizenship therein, and has cast his let with that society's prosperities or reverses. Is stated by Bar-Yaacov, a contemporary Israeli writer in the field of dual nationality:

&quot;..., the concept of n tionality implies a permanent condition involving the paramount obligation of the individual towards a particular State. The incompatibility of being a national of the or more States at one time lies not only in the psychological difficulty of being identified with sever I

Application Landridge in Institute and Insti

The state of the same to be a sum of the same of the s

"Ctates but also in the physical impossibility of performing simultaneously the rights and duties of citizenship in different reographical locations.

Maying in mind that most it tes naturalise only aliens who have taken up their residence within their territory, have been residing there for some length of time, and intend parametric to remain there, it would seem unrecomable for the home it tes to continue to assert their jurisdiction with regard to such persons and to require of them the duties of allegiones. It may be recalled that certain "tates have declined to accord diplomatic protection to nationals residing permanently abroad as, in the opinion of these States, the nationals concerned have not manifested such attachments to the country whose nationality they also seen."

of the immigration and Mationality of would not necessarily solve the problem of the dual national serving in the armed forces of his other nationality under current hited total law.

In the case of lehrann v. acheach, so the Court of openeds held that the citizenship-claimant, a mative-born thited States citizen who was also a citizen of Mitherland by virtue of his Juist Eurentage, Cid not an triate himself by toling an oath of ellegions to Mitzerland incident toling conscription into the Saiss Iray hile he was living in Britzerland with his mother. In the Court's epinion, the conscription of a dual national into the armed forces of the

and the second larger and all the second larger larger than the second larger than the seco country of his other nationality was sufficient to establish prima facie that his entry and service in such smed forces was involuntary and did not result in the loss of his inited States nationality.

where the plaintiff was born in the United States of Portuguese nationals, went with his mother to live in the Azores, and was conscripted into the Portuguese Tray at the age of 20, taking an oath of allegiance to Portugal as a member of its armed forces. In that case, the Court stated:

"The record in this case is wholly devoid of any evidence which would verrant any reasonable inference that plaintiff's entry into said armed forces was voluntary. It is conceded that he was conscripted and his contention that his induction was over his protests is uncontradicted. 'Conscription into the army of a foreign government of one holding dual citizenship is sufficient to establish orima facie that his entry and service were involuntary'. Lehrann v. Jeheson, 3 Cir., 1953, 206 F.2d 592, 594, "230" nationality through unauthorized foreign military service, in the case of Jalbuena v. Dulles, <sup>231</sup> the Third Circuit Court of Appeals dealt extensively with the obligations of dual nationals, saying:

"The United tates recognizes that a person may properly be simultaneously a citizen of this country and of another. Neither status in itself or in its necessary implications is deemed inconsistent with the other. .... The concept of dual citizenship recognizes that a person my have and exercise rights of nationality in two countries and be subject to the responsibilities of both. The mere fact that he asserts the rights of one citizenship does not without more mean that he renounces the other. ... Dual citizenship ... could not exist if the assertion of rights or the assumption of liabilitie of one ware deemed inconsistent with the maintenance of the other. Gee Tavality v. Inited States, 1952, 343 U.S. 717, at pares 723-724, 725, 72 3.Ct. 950, 950, 96 1.d. 1249. For present purposes the decisive point of all of this is that conduct merely declaratory of what one national aspect of dual citizenship necessarily connotes cannot reasonably be construed as an act of renunciation of the other national aspect of the actor's dual status.

The second secon

"Certainly this citizen of the Philippines, residing in that country, was bound loyally to support and defend the fundamental law of that land just as he would be bound in this country to support and defend our Constitution. Despite each obligation he may remain a citizen of the other country. Hence, merely to ac nowledge and declare the Thilippine obligation in a Thilippine passport application cannot responsibly have significance in derogation or renunciation of birthright cerican citizenship. 1232

Although there are lower Tederal Court cases where conscription of a dual national has been held not sufficient to render foreign military service involuntary and loss of United States nationality has resulted, 233 the Supreme Court in Mishikawa v. Dulles, supre, apparently adopted the reasoning of the Lehrann and Correla cases. In Mishikama, it will be recalled, the Court ruled that a showing by the citizenship-claimant of conscription into a foreign armed force adequately required the Government to prove that such military services was voluntary by "clear, convincing and unequivocal etidence".

The state of the s

Evidence that the citizenship-claimant had gone to the country of his dual nationality at a time when he was subject to conscription there was not sufficient for the Government to meet its burden of proof.

While in one sense Thited States citizens who e igrato to Israel, Imowing that they ill be called upon to a rve in that country's armed forces, might be construed as volunteers (over whom the United States as a nonperticipant in the iddle East conflict should exercise a duty of prevention), the operation of the Law of Return poses a hydr -herded complication. By obtaining Israeli nationality without applying for naturalization, taking an oath of allegiance or renouncing United States nationality, the individual acquires obligations to the State of Israel while he retains obligations to the Inited States, and the body of doctrine relating to the obligations of dual nationals comes into effect. The dual national may well have gone to Israel for the express purpose of serving in its armed forces and be in actuality a volunteer from a nonparticipant country, but when he obtains dual nationality with its concomitant obligations, the 'hited States can only suffer the consequences of his conduct because of its present inability to divest him of its nation lity. The cas of the dual national is distinct from that of the ordin'r, volunteer who does not acquire the nationality of the state in whose armed forces he serves. This fact may not have been sufficiently appreciated by rab rovernments and organizations.

CITY OF STREET STREET, STREET STREET, all series of many few and the series of the series of The second secon and the second s the problem to the estimate block telling the THE RESERVE THE PARTY OF SALES SEE SEE STATE OF SALES SEE SALES SA sections because of the court products or understand for policyllas Man, but a star and will be not a THE RESERVE THE PERSON NAMED IN COLUMN TWO IS NOT THE OWNER. the second limit of the contract of the party of the part NOTICE AND PERSONS ASSESSED AND PARTY AND PARTY. place and provide many and a second for another than DESCRIPTION OF THE PARTY OF THE residence of the country of the last country last and the party by mental and authors of male for perfect him between a sect the burner with my and the life investments are upon state AND DO INVESTIGATION AND THE PARTY AND THE PARTY OF THE P

United States citizens the ere dual nationals, therefore, avoid the effects of Jection 347(a)(3) when conscripted into the armed forces of their other nationality. In an er. such as the present, when conscription rather than enli t ent is the primary means of raising military forces throughout the world, such an exemption is at odds with the uniform edministration of Section 349(a)(3), and with the very language of the statute which encompasses both "entering" and "cervin" in" the armed forces of a foreign State. Thile there may be some justification for extending the benefit of the doubt regarding voluntariness to young men of dual nationality tho have been living abroad with their families during linority, who by reason of financial or familial dependency have been unable to take up residence in the mited states, and who have been drafted by the country of their dual nationality while they are minors, there would appear to be no such werit in extending an exemption to persons the have attained lagat adulthood and who have continued to reside permanently chrone knowing that they are subject to draft in the country of their residence. Even less is there merit in extending un me ption

the street of the street of the same the state of the s and the state of t A CONTRACT OF THE PARTY OF THE the world and the control of the control of the control of the second secon AND THE PERSON NAMED IN COLUMN 2017 TO the second residence and the second s provided by the continuous and necessaries with an investment and THE RESIDENCE OF THE PARTY OF T property and the property was a property of the party of the property of the control of the control of the control of the the second service and it would have a role of addition THE RESERVE THE PARTY OF THE PA the street was the same of the Court process and the second to the second t Annals of the second states of the second states the state of the s additional nationality, moving that they also acquire thereby the obligations of citizenship -- including military envices.

The state of the s

VIII Currested Approach for the hited Status Countil Decrivation of Nationality for Desitherized Tervice in Foreign regod Forces

A. Puture Constitutional Challenges to Lection 349(a)(b)

Section 349(a)(3) of the Immigration and Nationality
Let of 1952 was not held to be unconstitutional by froving Reserved.

Rusk. Its constitutional basis has been significantly erodel, however, by the sweeping language of froving which desired the power of Congress to legislate the loss of nationality of any unwilling United States citizen. Nevertheless, any entension of the principles of Afroving to lection 340(a)(3) to negate its enforcement construes the laprene Court's decision is an advisory opinion with respect to an act of Congress; the Court has historically held such advisory opinions as begond its power in deciding actual leases and controversios.

"If such actions as are here attempted, to determine the validity of legislation, are sustained, the result will be that this court, instead of keeping within limits of judicial power, and deciding cases or controversies arising between opposing parties, as the Constitution intended it should, will be required to give opinions in the nature of advice concerning legislative action, -- a function never conferred upon it by the Constitution, and against the exercise of which this court has steadily set its face from the beginning."234

Section 349(a)(3) should be fully enforced until such time as an actual case before the Juprale Court gives rise to a holding that it is unconstitutional. 235 It should be

Charles called all regardless because broad works and Ifroving prevailed only by a narrow wargin. Changes in the composition of the Court which have occurred since froving was decided may well result in an upset of the belance of opinion and a return to the principles enunciated in First X. Irownell, which have a respected heritage of prior judicial acceptance.

The Supreme Court will have an occasion in the new future to rule once again on the wrintended loss of hited States nationality in the case of Nellei v. Natl. 230 In this case, the citizenship-claiment, world, obtained ful of States citizenship by virtue of Section 3 1(a)(7) of the Immigration and Wetionality of of 1997, 400 which often citizenship to children born abroad of parate on lest and of whom is a 'hited "tate" citizen. Diction 301(b) of the Act 238 limits the grant of citizenship by muling the retention conditional upon the individual's conletion of period of five years continuous obysical presence in the mited States between the ages of fourteen and twenty-eight. Bollei was born in Italy of an Italian father and on Arerican mother. From childhood he had been regarded as a faited States citizen by the Government, he entered the Thit don't tee on visits without a vica, obtained a 'hitel Title Assort and registered for the druft. Iter various entended of the wesport and warnings about the effect of section 307(b), all t

THE RESERVE OF THE PARTY OF THE the same of the same and all of the same analysis became described profite promote profite policy and promote that Market wild provided for substance of months of plants of the party of sharper sales of party to the principal has sufficiently the same of the selection to seem that seem the selection at a property to and the fact of the contract of the contract of the last of the last of the -IT ALL MARKET IN ACCOUNTS TO ANNOUNCE AND APPROXICATION at the political and an experience and insure the contribute on Franchistan AND ALL PROPERTY AND ADDRESS OF PARTY OF ADDRESS. A THE PARTY OF THE the second secon section and designed one had be found the over a section with the fact that the second of the second the recovery makes but her a designate party is designed with the seeming to the conditional to condition the condition of AND AND AND DESCRIPTION OF THE PARTY WHILE AND ADDRESS FOR PERSON his twenty-fourth birthday, and the Devertment of State Soldcluded that he had lost his 'hited States Sitizenship. In the basis of the decisions in Johnsider V. Mal., AMIN., and frovin v. Rush, supra, a three-judge Matriot Court held that Congress may not grant citizenship and then qualify the grant by "... creating a second class citizenship or terminating the grant."239

The Court stated:

"In ifrovin the Court overried Corez; discarded the case-by-case approach, and sound d a general them that was contrary to the previously stated assumption that Congress had the page to expatriate citizens in certain circ matarres." (200)

that Jection 301(b) was intended to assure that, '...shildren of mixed allegiance have some connection to the state that is offering them its protection and other benefits of citizenship.", 241 the Court nonetheless concluded that

The broad teaching of froyin and Cohnoider is that once recognized or citizenship has been recognized or conferred, Congress my not recove the status it is for the citizen to abandon his citizenship voluntarily. "242

The case was argued before the increme Court on 15 labet-

by the Court, and the most was restard. The court of restard properties of the action of appeal concerns the power of Congress to attach a condition subsequent to a grant of citizenship, it is evident that the issue is essentially the same is that presented in froving - 1.2., whether or not Congress has the power to deprive an unwilling citizen of his citizenship.

Should a constitutional test of Jection 347(a)(3) result in a rejection of the reasoning in froming and return to the position that Congress do n h v power to espatriate unvilling citizens, the state cory provision as still be subject to other constitutional challenges. The threshhold issue of the existent of Congressions, were to legislate expatriation is affire tively re-stablished, the statute must with tan the civilien that it constitutes punishment. s di crused above, in I me il V. Indian-Martinez, sunra, Mr. Justice Coldberg, speckin; for a five act majority corposed of Chief Justice Turren and Justica Elec. Douglas and Brennan, in addition to himself, held that patriation under Section 349(2)(10) for departing or residing outside the jurisdiction of the United States in various or in time of national energency for the purposes of avoiding or evading military training and service was a punitive he sure which was unconstitutional in that it failed to provide the procedural safeguarie of due process quaranteel by the lift's and Sinth mondments. Only three to ber of that five wen majority remain on the Supreme Court tolay, and it is inded possible that the view of the dissenting Justices in hardoza-Martinez will prevail in a future test. Their view would hold that denationalization is within the planetude of Congress: regulatory powers and that it is not a penal sanction. It is certainly a sustainable contention that expatriation for certain uncoerced acts committed by citizens abroad is not a "punishment" in the constitutional sense, requiring salepliance with the procedural safeguards of the lifth and litth mendments, where the individual is not accused of a crime, subjected to a criminal prosecution or to the deprivation of his life, liberty or property. Loss of a thoughlity for unauthorized foreign military service certainly falls within this category since Federal la doe not make such conduct criminal. In lendoza-Martinez, the conduct giving rise to denationalization was also a criminal offense, and the two cases are thus distinguishable.

armed forces is held to be not paritive, the additional constitutional challenge of parishment which is pruch and unusual because of the possibility of statelessauss does not arise.

The plurality opinion in Tran V. Dallan, June, which held that the creation of a statelessauss was a cruel and unusual punishment in violation of the lighth landwort, and distinguished on the basis that expatriation in that case was imposed as an additional penalty for conviction by courts-martial for desertion from the armed forces in time of war.

AND THE RESERVE AND THE PARTY NAMED IN COLUMN TWO IS NOT THE PARTY NAMED IN COLUMN TW

There expatriation was clearly utilized as a punish ent.

In a case where denationalization is held to be punitive, and compliance with the procedural safeguards of the Fifth and Sixth Amendments has been initially determined, it is possible, of course, that the Supreme Court could follow Trop and characterize denationalization as a cruel and unusual punishment constitutionally prohibited by the Mighth amendment. It is submitted, however, that such a characterization is not valid.

Denationalization with resultant statelessness does indeed carry with it serious consequences for an individual, but such consequences are not necessarily ornel and unusual punishment simply because they are serious. Furthermore, it is not likely that an individual who is deprived of his Thited States citizenship, and who is rendered stateless thereby, will be left to wander aimlessly and alone throughout the world. An examination of those subsections of Section 349(a) which have not yet been declared unconstitutional reveals that in each instance the conduct which gives rise to expatriation reflects an existing attachment by the individual to a foreign State. To a greater or lesser degree in each case, the individual has sought to identify himself with another country and production of a label to compact management of the constitution has been placed as a first of the compact of th has been so accepted by that country. The provisions prescribing loss of nationality serve only to give legal effect to what is already a sociological reality.

3. An Approach to Deprivation of Nationality for the Future

One conclusion of this study is that legislative expatriation of an unwilling citizen should be upheld in some instances.

Certainly, under international law deprivation of nationality by a unilateral act of State, even when it results in statelessness, is permissible. Denationalization resulting in statelessness was specifically recognized as a permissible consequence for certain individual conduct in the proposed United Nations Convention on the Neduction of Statelessness.

Declaration of Human Rights, which recognizes the right of "everyone" to have a nationality, nonetheless acknowledges the power of a State to withdraw its nationality by a unilateral act. In setting a standard of achievement for nations on the basis of human rights to which national decision-makers are obliged to look for guidance, Article 15 requires only that such deprivation of nationality not be "arbitrary".

THE RESIDENCE OF THE PARTY OF T

Loss of United States nationality is not at all as clear as the formulators of that "absolute view" insist. The historical basis on which it has been predicated has been largely refuted by Justice Harlan's dissenting opinion in afroyim and elsewhere. As has been demonstrated, it is certainly not a view which has commanded unanimous judicial adherence. As stated by Maney in his appraisal of Chief Justice Marren's dissenting opinion in Perez:

"There is nothing irresistibly compelling in the Chief Justice's thesis that the people, because they are sovereign, cannot be deprived of their citizenship. The 'sovereignty of the people' may be a fine oratorical flourish, but it is rather dubious constitutional doctrine. Nor does the authority mustered by the Chief Justice in support of his contention that Congress is without power to take away citizenship withstand close scrutiny." 244-

statutory provisions prescribing loss of Inited It too nationality have tended to focus on whether the individual's expatriating conduct indicated a 'voluntary relinquishment' of citizenship. As pointed out by Mr. Justice Marlan in his Afrovim dissent, this phrase is susceptible of a twofold interpretation; it may refer to the logical inference to be drawn from actions which are performed without duress, or it may refer only to actions committed with the intention of

And the second of the second o

in both senses, and its continued use does not contribute to clarity of analysis. The ttorney General's Opinion analyzed previously, and reprinted in Opendix of this study, utilizes the phrase and thus has this defect.

The conceptual difficulty posed by the phrase "voluntary relinquishment" is revealed in a recent law review article attempting to define the term. 245 In an effort to give "voluntary relinquishment" a substantive definition, the author states:

"A citizen should be held to have 'voluntarily relinquished' his American citizenship only if he voluntarily and formally renounces that citizenship in a manner prescribed by law, or if he voluntarily and intentionally acquires a foreign nationality. If he is a dual national, he should be held to have relinquished his citizenship only if he voluntarily commits a hostile act for the state of his other nationality and knows the act is inconsistent with the obligations of his American citizenship. 1246

Laying aside for a moment the possible ambiguities of a test consisting of a "voluntary and formal renunciation of citizenship in a manner prescribed by law", the author had stated earlier in his appraisal that:

"In the case of a non-dual national, i.e., a citizen only of the United States, any definition of 'voluntary relinquishment' that embraces conduct short of acquiring a foreign nationality seems unnecessarily and unfairly broad." 247

Thus, the author would seem to permit a voluntary and formal renunciation without the intentional acquisition of a foreign nationality, an outcome which he had already characterized as "unnecessary" and "unfair". That his voluntary and formal renunciation is not confined to a written instrument expressing intent, but also "embraces conduct" (thus eliminating a possible distinction between the two characterizations) can be seen in another of the author's comments:

"Intention to relinquish citizenship must be either express or inferred from the voluntary act." 248

It is readily apparent that an intent to relinquish citizenship may be "inferred" from a variety of "voluntary act" s established by Congress as criteria for expatriation, and that these acts may be construed as falling within the author's test of a voluntary and formal renunciation of citizenship in a manner prescribed by law. The broadness of this latter test renders it unworkably ambiguous. In addition, it is precisely this "inferrence" which the frowin case hold could not be drawn. Essentially frowin held that Congress had not the power to provide that a citizen's conduct could give rise to an inference "voluntary relinquishment"; "voluntary relinquishment" under afrovin means intentional relinquishment and that intention must be express. The circumlocutory pitfalls of "voluntary relinquishment" cloud any analysis which uses it as a test.

The test of "express renunciation" of nationality was propounded by Boudin prior to Afrovim as the only constitutionally permissible standard. In his article, Involuntary Loss of American Nationality, 249 Boudin denied the legitimacy of the historical basis for Congress' denationalization authority. While the language of the Afrovim majority opinion considerably confuses the matter by referring to "voluntary relinquishment", it is evident from the opinion as a whole that the Court adopted Boudin's "express renunciation" test. Boudin indicated that Congress could make certain undesirable conduct by a citizen abroad a criminal offense, and by so doing give notice to the world that we desire to avoid embroilment in the internal affairs of other nations; he concluded that the "... drama of denationalization" is surely not a requisite to international amity." 250

Such a conclusion is another "fine oratorical flourish", and it may be the solution which the United States is forced to adopt if the Supreme Court pursues the Afrovim rationale and further narrows Congressional power to denationalize an unwilling citizen. It is well established in constitutional law that Congress does have power to enact laws regulating the conduct of citizens while they are beyond the limits of the territorial jurisdiction of the United States. 252 As stated by Oppenheim-Lauterpacht:

"The Law of Nations does not prevent a State from exercising jurisdiction over

the state of the s

"its subject travelling abroad, since they remain under its personal supremacy."253

However, making certain conduct abroad a crimmnal offense is not a solution which reaches the problem of the citizen who avoids criminal sanctions by remaining outside the jurisdiction of the United States courts while continuing to flout the law of his country.

The present controversy with Arab nations over the service of United States citizens in the armed forces of Israel presents a clear example of the need for the power of a sovereign nation to declare certain acts of its citizens abroad to be expatriative. As was stated in the majority opinion in Perez v. Brownell, supra, there is a "critical connection" between certain conduct abroad and the possession of American citizenship by the person committing the act which makes such conduct potentially embarrassing to the United States, and "pregnant with the possibility of embroiling this country in disputes with other nations. The termination of citizenship terminates the problem. The

In enacting the various subsections of Section 349(a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act, Congress has identified conduct which, insofar as it is not criminal, is at least a diminution of undivided allegiance to the United States. Congress, as the collective will of this nation's citizenry, has determined that such conduct in diminution of allegiance shall result in the severance of the tie of nationality with the individual actor. (Certainly, the individual's conduct must be uncoerced for that result to occur.) The Supreme Court's constitutional prohibition of the power of Congress to expatriate an unwilling citizen subordinates that legislative will, at best, on uncertain grounds. As stated by Mr. Justice Harlan

OF THE RESERVE THE PARTY OF THE

"The construction now placed on the Citizenship Clause rests, in the last analysis, simply on the Court's ipse dixit, evincing little more, it is quite apparent, than the present majority's own distaste for the expatriation power."255

The emasculation of the expatriation power, and the general uncertainty in the administration of the loss of nationality laws, which the overly subjective test of intent in the Afrovim case has created, can be observed in the interpretive guidelines agreed upon by the Department of State and the Immigration and Naturalization fervice following the issuance of the Ittorney General's Opinion. These instructions, containing general principles and procedures, were transmitted to diplomatic and consular posts abroad on 16 May 1969 for use in the processing of statutory expatriation cases. 256 Ms stated in a recent article by Mr. D. M. Duvall, an Attorney for the Inited States Passport Office:

"Under the State-Justice guidelines the voluntary performance of the following

"acts is considered highly persuasive evidence of an intention to relinquish citizenship and will normally result in expatriation absent countervailing evidence of an intent not to transfer or abandon allegiance to the Inited States: naturalization in a foreign state: a meaningful oath of allegiance to a foreign state; service in the armed forces of a foreign state engaged in hostilities against the United States: or service in an important political post under a foreign government. Other voluntary acts under the remaining statutory expatriative provisions normally will not result in expatriation unless the record in the particular case contains persussive evidence of an intent by the citizen to transfer his allegiance to a foreign state or abandon his allegiance to the United States. "257

Thus, in any proceeding to examine whether an individual has lost his United States nationality under the statute, the Government has the burden of establishing by a preponderance of the evidence, 250 that (1) the alleged expatriating act was committed voluntarily, i.e. without duress, (if the lack of voluntariness has been raised by the citizenship-claimant) and that (2) the citizenship-claimant intended to effect the loss of his United States citizenship in committing the expatriating act. There the Government fails to meet its burden of establishing voluntariness, the inquiry ends in favor of the retention of nationality, the question of intent is no longer relevant.

If his case of lack of volunteriness is uncertain, the citizenship-claimant need not rely on prevailing on that and the particular of the last term in the last term in the last issue, but may fall back upon the Government's burden of establishing his subjective intent. It is obvious, that absent an express declaration of intent, any human conduct may be rendered ambiguous by the actor's claim that he did not intend the natural and probable inference to be drawn from it. When the individual is free to interpose his subjective intent as a bar, the Government's burden is virtually an impossible one. This can be seen in the Justice-Utate guidelines for establishing loss of nationality for unauthorized foreign armed services.

that provision /Dection 349 (a)(3) can occur in only two ways. One, when the service is in the armed forces of a foreign state engaged in hostilities against the United States and the record contains no persuasive evidence that the person intended not to transfer his allegiance to the foreign state or to abandon his allegiance to the United States; and two, when the service in the armed forces of a state not engaged in hostilities against the United States and the record contains persuasive evidence of intent to transfer allegiance to the foreign state or to abandon allegiance to the United States. "259"

Under these standards, a citizen would be free to join an enemy armed force engaged in open hostilities against the United States, and then to claim at a later date that he did not intend his conduct to be expatriative, that he was always loyal to the United States and (possibly) that he fought against the United States only because he disagreed with a particular governmental policy. That such a result could be obtained is nothing short of preposterous, and yet clearly it could be obtained under the present guidelines, particularly in view of the liberal standard of persuasive evidence which the citizenship-claimant needs to present. It is should not be forgotten in considering such a result that when the subjective element of intent becomes relevant to the inquiry, voluntariness of conduct has already been established.

The potential impact of the frozin case upon United States foreign relations is substantial. 261 Thited . tates citizens, native born and naturalized, may live abroad for extended periods of time and cease to participate as citizens in the normal community processes of this country. This freedom to travel and to reside where one chooses is essential in any open and democratic society; but since ifroyin, the way is now clear for United States citizens to participate actively in the internal affairs of a foreign State -- they may obtain a foreign nationality, take an oath of allegiance, serve in the armed forces, hold a political or appointive office and vote in a political election -- as long as they present "persuasive evidence" that they did not intend to lose their citizenship thereby. An open and democratic society may have to bear the loss of the contributions of its citizens living abroad, but it can and should demand that those citizens refrain from involvement in foreign internal affairs.

In an era of sensitive international relationships, where the attitudes of segments of a nation's population are studied by foreign governments in the process of determining their own policies, the United States requires the undivided allegiance of all its citizens. Inited States sitizenship is indeed a precious heritage which should not be lightly lost, but it is not too much to expect that citizens abroad will evince by their conduct that they truly do have such a regard for it.

In a future test, the Supreme Court should return to the reasoning of the Perez case and uphold the power of Congress to denationalize an unwilling citizen as a necessary and proper means to effectuate the Federal power to regulate foreign affairs. Certainly the expatriative conduct must bear a rational nexus to the specific Congressional regulatory power. The conduct sanctioned with loss of nationality must impede or impair the exercise of that power. Further, Congress cannot act capriciously or harshly by making any disfavored conduct expatriative. The conduct in question must represent a diminution of the individual's undivided allegiance to the United states. Such conduct may include an express intention to renounce citizenship or conduct from which diminution of an individual's undivided allegiance may be inferred.

The Court should abandon its test of 'voluntary relinquishment", in view of the uncertain meaning of that phrase, and should focus instead on whether the individual has been genuinely coerced in his commission of the expatrative act. There coercion exists it is not suggested that expatriation should result. There there is no coercion the individual brings the consequences of his conduct upon himself; loss of nationality is not imposed upon his by the fiat of an oppressive government.

Unauthorized service in the armed forces of a foreign State meets the above proposed constitutional criteria for expatriative conduct. A rational nexus between ununtherized foreign military service and the power to regulate foreign affairs exists in the very substantial resultility that such service may draw the United states into conflicts in which it desires to remain a nonparticipant. That such service is, at a minimum, productive of international discord has been demonstrated. Also, individuals serving in armed forces abroad may be aiding the advancement of international policies contrary to the aims and interests of the inited tate. Purther, the power to denutionalise for unsuthorized foreign military service permits the United States to emercise more effectively a nonparticipant's duty of prevention in restricting a belligerent's access to its human resources. Such a restriction is in keeping with the development of more stringent page 14 manual submission and the order of the contract of the

CAPPER IN THE CAPPER DESIGN AND THE RESIDENCE MANAGEMENT with an experience of the Park Charles of States of Spirits and Advanced where the latest control of the second of the second secon the same of the sa the second secon the state of the s and the second of the second o the same of the sa concepts of neutrality in customary international law, which are, in turn, reflective of the greater degree of regulation actually practiced by a State with respect to its citizenry in the latter part of the twentieth century.

An individual's act of entering or serving in the armed forces of a foreign State without authorization certainly constitutes a diminution of allegiance to the United States since he must also bear a loyalty to the country in whose armed forces he serves. Turthermore, during his foreign military service, the individual is unavailable to honor his obligation of service to the United State. . Duch nationals, who by their very status bear divided loyelties, should not avoid the consequences of unauthorized foreign military service because of conscription. Then they have willingly acquired an additional nationality, or, after obtaining majority, they have remained in the country of their other nationality knowing that they are subject to a military draft, conscripted armed service should not be regarded as coerced. Loss of United States nationality by dual nationals in these instances merely evidences the sociological reality of their attachment to a foreign country, and certainly is not objectionable because of resultant statelessness.

The admittedly distasteful aspect of resultant statelessness, and the contest over whether statelessness is a cruel colds pell inclination of the constant to the constant of the collection of the constant of the collection of the collection of the collection of the cities of the cities ear of actions to activate the big action of the water manufactured by the religion of the section was a re-AND AND SHARE OF THE PERSON AND ADDRESS OF THE PERSON AS ADDRESS OF THE PERSON AND ADDRESS OF THE PERSON A the product of the contract of the company to with the second personnel control or second black property of additional to the Print of any property of the last CASE AND ADDRESS OF A SALVEST SA PARTICIPATION AND PROPERTY. AND REAL PROPERTY AND ADDRESS OF THE PERSON AND PARTY AND ADDRESS OF THE PERSON ADDR many or or the contract of the principle of the property of the principle of the party o A STATE OF THE PARTY OF THE PAR and unusual punishment, could be eliminated by a restoration of the provisions of the Nationality Let of 1940, which made loss of nationality for unauthorized foreign armed Lervice contingent upon the acquisition of the nationality of the fereign country. 262 Duch a change in the Immigration and Nationality Act of 1952 was recommended by the President's Commission on Immigration and Naturalisation in 1953: however, it was recommended for reasons other than avoidance of the constitutional challenge. 263

a reversion to the provisions of the 1940 let would eliminate the consequence of statelessness, but it would not solve the problem of avoiding United Ttates' embroilant in international controversy over the unauthorized service of her citizens in the armed forces of a foreign country. The way would still be clear for Juited Ttates citizens to serve in foreign military forces, as long as they did not acquire the particular foreign nationality. The possible prejudical to United States' foreign relations would continue to exist. To permit such an exception to the rule would also under the rational nexus between the ematriating conduct and the regulatory power of Congress.

It is true that merican history from Revolutionary times is replete with examples such as Lafayette, Loselus'o and von Steuben, all of whom were foreigners serving in the armed forces of a nation other than their own. In addition, foreign armed conflicts, such as the Dyanich Civil ar and world War II prior the United States' entrance. Buch a history may be said to constitute a tradition of respect in the Inited States of a citizen's freedom to fight for a cause abroad. However, no matter how nobly or idventurously inspired, such inclinations cannot be held to prevail over the political realities that the actions of a country's citizens may be construed as an expression of national policy, or at a minimum -- of national sentiment, and that such an expression can result in serious and undesirable repercussions in foreign relations. The interests of an entire nation may not be put in jeopardy by the actions of a select few of its citizens pursuing their personal ends.

foreign causes through service in foreign military forces by the terms of Section 349(a)(3) itself. If the individual citizen first obtains the permission of the learetary of itate and Secretary of Defense, his service in a foreign armed force will be with impunity as far as the loss of his citizenship is concerned. This element of regulation permits a review of the prospective foreign military service in terms of its consequences with respect to Thited States' policy. If conflict or embarrassment for the United States is not foreseen, the individual may be permitted to satisfy his personal goals and the latest territories and the second states and the second states and the second states and the second states are the second states and the second states are the second states and the second states are the second st abroad. There conflict or environment my exist, this privilege must be denied. In view of the intrinserie, of United States foreign relation and the potential for mischief which foreign military service creates, it should not be expected, as a practical matter, that this permission will be frequently granted.

In the final analysis, it is necessary for the coordinate branches of the United States Government to begin to speak with one clear voice with respect to loss of United States nationality if it is ever to maintain any semblance of credibility on the subject. A reaffirmation by the Supreme Court of the Congressional power to apatriate in certain instances, as suggested above, and an apardoment of the test of "voluntary relinquishment" in favor of a test of "uncoerced conduct", would hopefully provide the "countive branch with guidance in enforcing the law, and permit the disharmonious voices of the Federal Government to sound in concert.

"ost wtil

- 3. 171 1 70 09: 5 Tadson, International Laboration 37 (1936).
- 4. 1 International Law (Souter acht, Tth. el., 8 3, 65.
- 5. Teis, Mationality and Atatologomes An Intermitional Last (1996) at 65.
- distinguished from international law. The fact that the ratter is largely controlled by municipal law frequently give rise to conflicts between the law of different countries and results in may case of dual nationality. For enemals, a person been in a country may have the nationality of that country by reason of the last that literate another country by reason of the last that his preents are national, of such other country or season, although acquiring a new nationality through a turnification, may not lose his former national ty.

  countries, particularly suropean countries, refunctionality through a turnification of the results to expatric to themselves by naturalization except under certain one ditions. First factorith, hirest of International Line (1942) 1-2.

whether he is or is not a national is a Latter of the internal law of the state. But the question whether or not an individual possesses a certain nationality may easily be raised between states and for the attlement of such a controversy an appeal to municipal low may not be decisive." Milliams, "Denationalization", VIII D.Y. J.L. (1927) 45, 50 (quoted in 6 Whitemen, Question at 1).

Cronch (me), .C.I.J., av. D. 4, erle ,

- . cla, on oit. it die.
- at 1. at 3. Also quotet in A dittern, or cit.
- 10. Leywond H. Inderson, The Let Hori Times, Vol. C.I., 7 lovember 1969, p. 17.
- 11. T. The vening Star, So. 312, Sehington, D.C.,
- 22. Id., a. .-1.
- 13. 387 1.S. 253, 97 S.Ct. 1660 (1967).
- 14. 24 TI CAST Doc. 177717 5/0479: 42 3. "tt'y.Con.,
- 15. The same provision was remacted as Jection 340(a)(f) of the Laigration and nationality at af 2/ June 1952, c.477, 66 Stat. 267, 7 June 1952 (c)(f). The latter provision could also, therefore, suffer the condernation set forth in inviting
- 16. See Note 14, supra.
- 17. McDongal and Teliciano, his and Maning Corld Miles (Tev Tevon and London: Tale niversity russ, 1777), passin.
- 28. 8 7.0.0. 81468.
- 19. 0 5.3.C. 81497 (a)(3).
- 20. 8 .3.C. $1401(a)(5). This section is a re-enactment of $401(e) of the Nationality lot of 1040, which was the statutory provision dis proved in frozia.
- 21. Debate occurred on pril 23-35 and June 10, 1952 in the House of Representatives and on May 7-22 and June 11, 1952 in the Senate.
- 22. 90 Cong. Rec. 5160 (1952) (remures of Senator harmhrey).
- 23. H.M.Ren. No. 1365, Sand Cong., 2nd Je s. (1952).

OK

- The Joint marings before the Jubect littees of the Co. Littees on the Judielary, Jons. Cons., let. 2005., a. 5.716, t. 5.2379 and H. 5.2816, Mills to available the Lets relating to Immi ration, Naturalization and Nationality, M.D. Cand. Congress, Jeanings, Lib. of Congress Vol. 142, 700-710.
- 25. 9 7.0.0. 811438.
- 26. See Note 24, Mearings at 101.
- 27. Id.
- 28. Id. at 112.
- 27. 10., 732-722
- 30. 11., 200-209
- 31. Id.
- 32. To other country in the world has as any enter to grounds for expatriction as the inited itate. The the exception of hussia and its iron-curtain satallites, no other country seeks to tale arey citizenship as arbitrarily as we do. Jost countries of the world country because of the world country buring the last 10 years we have empatrical ever 30,000 citizens, not because they were disloyed, but because of some unwitting act on their part, such as remaining outside the Thited States during the mr years when transportation had to the inited land was difficult or impossible and when we had no consulate established abroad. Close to 4,000 people have lost their incrican citizenship by voting in Italy. Indicate the communists would not obtain control of Italy.

" 'e also believe that only voting in national for imelections should expatriate and that voting under mistake, duress, or any other undue influence, whether it consist of cral pressure or other type of undue pressure, chould not result in exatriation.

thorough study of our expatriation less should be undertaken. The history of our expatriation lass should be studied, as well as those of other countries. We ubuit that such a study will reveal that we have gone too far in expatriating our citizens, that we are too writtens, and that we provide for the last of citizenship for individuals process at a finish are not inconsist at with continuous all from

The state of the s

37. contid. It for hit i toto. I while the term is now to there has revised up a definition in a to the like the in favor of retail to citizenching and not, as is here propose, to appear to old so or resons the are either tateless or a trick of the constant of the const

"In its present form the bill has empletely disregarded constitutional restrictions upon deportation, denaturalization, and expatriction. If all possible constitutional objectives are not carefully heedel, then, years after the enactions of the bill, an alien or citizen may be able to influence the Supreme Court of the validity of such objections, with the result that thousands of proceedings will be void. The havecan confusion which resulted when the supreme Court void in a condeportation hearings in the time and will again be repeated. This does not make for orderly and efficient administration of our immigration can nationality laws." Id. at 622-633.

- 33. 50 7.3.C. m. 815/2.
- 34. Let lection 2014 of the 1 light thought information of a 1970, 0 1.5.0. $207.
- status of the individual in his relationship to the state and are often used ymony custy. The more nationality, however, has a broader reaning that the word citizenship. Like ise the terms of them and national are frequently used interchangually. It here again the latter term is broader in its core than the former. The term sitizen, in its core than the former. The term sitizen, in its core acceptation, is applicable only to person the endoved with full political and civil rights in the body politic of the state. The term actional include a citizen as well as a person who, though not a citizen, over permanent allegiance to the state and is entitled to its protection, as, for example, natives of certain of the outlying possessions of the mited to tea. It also includes legal entitles such as corporation. Certain all sees of persons are described as latituals, but not citizens' by section 204 of the Nationality of af 1940 (94 Stat. 1132)." ITT Medicorth, finant 26 International Low (1942) 1-2.
- 36. See Fromin V. Puch, 250 P. Man. 506 and from V.
- 37. Provin v. Dud : marra . t 255, 87 1.0t. at 2561.

STATE OF THE PARTY AND ADDRESS.

AND DESCRIPTION OF THE PARTY OF

A RESIDENCE OF THE PARTY OF THE

and the second section of the section of

- Jo. 16. at 255, 37 J. 9t. at 16.1.
- 3. Id. at 257, 37 3.Ct. at 1.52.
- 40. Id. at 263, 87 3.Ct. at 1665.
- 41. Id. at 263, 97 S.Ct. at 1668.
- 42. 356 T.S. 4; 78 S.Ct. 568 (1958).
- 43. 387 U.S. at 262, 87 J.Ct. at 1663.
- W. Id. at 257, 87 6.0t. at 1662.
- 45. M. at 267, 37 S.Ct. at 1667.
- 46. 356 7.5. at 60-69, 70 G.Ct. at 501.
- 47. Id. at 70, 70 ... Ct. at Jor.
- 48. 307 U.S. at 263, 37 B.Ct. at 1000 (explosis surplied).
- 49. Id. at 269 ftm.1, U/ ".Ot. at 1600-1669 ftm.1.
- 50. Chott v. Janford, 10 Nov. 303 (100%) The case hold that Regroes, whether quancipated or not, were not citizens of the Thited Otaces and word not calling to any of the privilege and instruction conferred by the Constitution upon citizens of the United States. The Supreme Court further held that no take by any act of its own, massed since the Constitution, could be a person a citizen of the United States by conferring state citizenship upon him.
- 91. 387 U.S. at 25%, 07 S.Ct. at 1676.
- 52. 9 Meat. 738, 6 t. M. 204 (1824).
- 93. 169 U.S. 649, 18 S.Ot. 498 (1898).
- 54. 7 heat. at 827. Moted in frozin E. Luci, 37 4. . . at 261, 87 f. St. at 186-1675.
- 55. 387 V.S. at 266-267, 87 J.Ot. at 1667.
- The last vice of evidence upon fighth the Court relies for this eriod is a brill obiter little first the lengthy opinion for the Court in John v. It of the Thite itster, ? Heat. (20, 20, 10, 10)

- AND AN AROUND OF TAXABLE AND THE -00 * 04 . 1

contid. Fritt: by Mr. Olief Justice Marchell. Tile 56. use of the dictre is entirely uncolumnia, for its terms and contact main quite of dr. Jet 11 amount have been intended to reach the outside no are too. here. The ce tral issue before the Court in Miora was the right of the ban to bring to suit for equitable relief in the course of the mited of tes. In organist, commet for a born had an ort a that although the bar had been created by the lave of the mited state, it did not necessarily follow that any course involving the best bed when theor those laws. Your el urto. 'y an long that the neturalization of a fine minute of rediff be sein to confor up a the a civil and file of the civil also actions in the federal courts. Id., at Dip-Civ. Ch. a. 204. Not surprishably, the Court rejects the analogy, and results that an act of a toralization 'does not proced to give, to relat, or to prothat a naturalized citiz n ust in all respects stand 'on the footing of a notive.' Id., at 327, 6 1.12. 20%. The Court plainly ment no more than the t counsel's analogy is broken by Congress' insbillity to offer a n turclized citizen right, or ear cities which it's in any particular from those given to a retire-low. citizen by birth. Mr. Justice Johnson's direction of the analogy in dissent confirms the Court's aurore. Id., at 975-975, 6 L. Dd. 204.

here, renches the dietus from its contest, ad attributes to the Court an observation extrated even to the analogy before it. Normally the court today requires the assumption that the Court in Alexander requires the assumption that the Court in Alexander requires the assumption that the Court in Alexander to decide an issue which no must be in Alexander to a careful been debated, to which count in Alexander reached the Court, all this, it must be recalled, is in an area of the last in dich the Court had steadfastly avoided unnerestary commit. The court had steadfastly avoided unnerestary commits. The court had steadfastly avoided unnerestary commits.

75/20

Support from its invocation of the district of the opinion for the Court in Thited States of the Circumstant of the Court in Thited States v. of the Crit, 169 U.S. States and the court in The control is a there was whether said born of Chinese nationals domicile in the alt d

(Ttm. 1? contic.) "tuto is in comican eitier, of The same its birth cours in this country. The dictor will This the Court rel' , which con 1 to or a ti Tis of a roit ration of the dictur las whom, and therefore secreely to considered research elleration of the issue and hefore the Court. Coreover, the dicture april conceiv his bu read to hel only that he power to construct on welling eltiron was conformed alther by the leveralisation Clause or by the Point out, read at; if the dictir seems no more, it would of course not even runch the holding in Perez. Finally, the diety and be read in light of the subsequent orinics for the Court, written by Mr. Justice Mc enn., in Mc out. v. ro, 230 M.S. 200, 36 L.Co. 10, 60 L.d. 207. De pite counsel's invocation of one lim ro, id., at 300 and 303, 36 v.Ct. 200, the Court half in Mail Mail that morriage between an perican citizen and on alien, unaccompanied by any intention of the citizen to renounce her citizenship, nonethaless permitted Congress to withdraw her nationality. It is inceterial for these virposes that Mrs. Lackonzie's citizenship might, under the statute there, have been restored upon termination of the marital relationship she did not consent to the loss, even temporarily, of her citizenship, and, under the proposition apporently urged by the fourt today, can therefore scarcely ratter that her amplitriation was subject to some condition subjectent. It ce s that neither Mr. Justice Melenna, who became a mediar of the Court ofter the organic but is fore the accision of the last the state of the last the forest the last the forest the fores 1672-1673.

- 57. Id. et 292-273, 37 U.Ct. et 1685-1681.
- 50. 356 M.S. ot 50, 78 t.Ct. at 57%.
- 59. Id. at 60-63, 79 3.64. at 577.
- 69. Id. at 61, 70 ... at 577.
- 61. 239 H.B. 299, 36 B.Ct. 1 7 (1915).
- 62. 339 9.0. 401, 70 3.0t. 202 (1950).

- 13. 316 to. at 12-60, 73 7.00. at 1717-179.
- dt. 355 7.5. at 60, 78 c. 6t. at 507.
- 65. 307 M.B. 325, 55 J.Ct. 304 (1939).
- 66. Ja. at 329, 59 0.Ct. at 887.
- 67. Id. at 334, 59 S.Ct. at 889.
- 60. 356 7.5. 86, 78 c.ct. 590 (1951).
- 69. 8 U.S.C. $1481(a)(8).
- 70. 356 W.S. 129. 78 J.Ct. 612 (1956).
- 71. Immigration and Nationality et of 1952, Section 349(a)(3); S U.S.C. $1481(a)(3).
- 72. 356 U.S. at 136-137, 78 W.Ct. at 617.
- 73. Id. at 138, 78 3.Ct. at 618.
- 74. Id. at 141, 73 S.St. at 519.
- 75. Id. et 144, 28 b. Ct. at 621.
- 76. 372 4.8. 14+, 33 3.St. 554 (1963)
- 77. 3 77.3.0. 41407(..)(1).
- 78. 377 U.S. 163, St S.Ct. 1187 (1964)
- 79. 8 J.S.C. 81484(n).
- Sc. See, Gordon, The Sitizen end the Mate. Posts of Congress to Tratriate Derican Sitizens, 3 deorgetom Law Journal, 315, 332 (1967).
- 91. 377 U.S. 214, 84 A.Ct. 1294 (1964), rehearing denied: 377 U.S. 1010, 84 C.Ct. 1994 (1964).
- 62. 3 7.3.C. Silval(a)(3).
- 83. 317 P.2d 673, 675.
- 84. 372 J.S. at 187, 93 G.Ct. at 577.
- 85. Id. at 187, 83 8.Ct. at 577.
- 36. See, Note 80, op.cit. at 333 et ses.

-09 +ES 45 -61 A THE RESIDENCE AND A PROPERTY AND A SECOND SECOND

- C7. II. t 333.
- 03. II.
- stitutional law in advance of the accessity deciding it. * * * It is not the labels of the court to decid mustions of a constitutional nature unless absolutely recessary to a lesision of the case. (citation omitted) The Court will not 'formulate a rule of constitutional law broader than is required by the precise facts to which it is to be applied. It is to be applied. It. Justice Brandeis concurring in Isburnder v. Tennassee Valley uthority, 297 J.S. 280, 55 J.Ct. 466 (INC) The statement of Justice Trandels was approved in law Motor Co. v. Timber-Detroit wie Co., 32) J. ... 129, 67 J.Ct. 231 (1948) and Lescym Tray v. Marie Court, 331 J. ... 549, 67 J.Ct. 1401. See also, Lord v. Isbans, 94 J.C. 645, 24 J.Ud. 302 (1877).
- 90. Section 349(a)(5) of the Imagration and Nationality act of 1952, 8 7.5.C. $1481(a)(5).
- 91. Note 41, surra.
- 92. 42 00. Att'y Gen. No. 34 (1969).
- 93. Id.
- 94. 3 M.O.C. SILO3(8).
- 95. Note 92, gurn. The complete text of the orderior is reproduced ac opening.
- 26. 24 TO CICE DOS. 17:27 3/2/4:5.
- 97. Id. at 1.
- 98. 24 TT OLOTE Doc. 17714 5/5/477.
- 99. Note 96, doc. oit. at 1-2.
- 100. Department of State ress Release to. 337, "Statement by the Department of State on Pareign Military ervice by Thited States Citizens", (11 November 1767). It of 21 July 1970, it does not appear that "additional tess" have been implemented. See appendices 3 and 5.
- 101. Puskrat v. Inited States, 219 ... 346, 361, 31 a.Ct. 250, 255 (1911).
- 102. Supra, p. 27.

- THE REAL PROPERTY.
  - .
- - Ciller Della des publication and the Ciller and the sales
    - DOC VIEW NO.
    - A THE RESIDENCE AND ADDRESS OF THE LABOUR.
      - -17.
      - ADDRESS OF A STATE OF THE PARTY OF THE PARTY
  - and the second s
    - COTTO NO TO NO
      - ACT OF THE PARTY
    - The second second second
      - and the same and you want out
- - THE RESERVE AND ADDRESS OF THE PARTY OF THE
    - 18 18 101

- 103. Mis, on cic. c. 122.
- 104. Id. at 127-173.
- 105. Id. at 124-127.
- 106. Zīgaī7 a Ob. 67, 82.
- 107. 137 5.26 890 (1943).
- 108. Id. at 903.
- 109. 169 7.8. 649, 28 88t. 456 (3898).
- 110. Id. at 658, 13 SSt. at 164.
- 111. Veis, op.oit. at 126-127, 129, 166.
- 112. Id. at 120.
- 113. Id. at 85.
- 114. See Note 3. sums.
- 115. I.e., Protocol Relating to Millumy Climatic in in Certain Cases of Dual Intionality (Marine 22):

  Protocol Relative to a Cortain Tomosf State Lecemens (170 FVID 115) and Secial Putanol Concerning Statelearness (T.M. Doc. C.20) M. 134. 130. V.)

  The last sited Putocol has not some into effect because of an insufficient number of ratification or accessions. (Contained, 10 p.quisel).
- 116. See p. 1, supra.
- 117. L.W. Doc. C.200. M. 117. 1730 V. ( . Mationality).
- 118. Ul Doc. 1/600, pera. 46: Thitel lettone Yearbook on Thron lights for 101/7, Part III, nnex, 741.
- 119. A Study of Statelessness, D. Rub. Jo. 1949, HT, C.
- 120. See tenerally, The left of the International Additional Completion, of The Ut. V. 4, 2337 Cis, and also
- 121. 9 W C.C. Jupp. No. 9 (4/2503), length of the International Law Consission (1994) at 23.
- 122. Id. at 24.
- 123. Id. at 26.

113/11/19 115 THE RESERVE .112 or its TEMPORE PROPERTY. 15/22 - 1- ----C 10 AB

- 724. Id. at 29.
- 125. Id. at 32.
- 126. Id. at 33.
- 127. It will recall sted to the lear of a thoughty for 'deartica' and 'draft works with the land to the constitution in Trop v. The land in Market L. Land L. Constitution of the land of
- 128. Dection 340(2)(3) of the 1952 of.
- 129. Section 349(1)(5) of the 1952 ct.
- 130. See 9 The Control of the 7, The Thirty of the 7, The Thirty of the 7, The Thirty of the 7,
- 131. See Note 121, 100v.
- 132. W M. 67. V. 4, pp. 20-30.
- 133. Unly the his displayers and the law of the Convertion sof the Point of the life of th
- 134. Price 3, Convention on the Debution of it told when ,
- 135. 3 7 5 5 30 . (C1 Yestron's 26 324 Shirt 14403
- on the Condision on Educations (or which she was also Chairman) and Representative to the description state: In giving or a proved to the Declaration today, it is of primary importance that the clumply in mind the basic character of the document. It is not an energy it is not an international agreement. It is not and one not purport to be a fatheast of law or of legal obligation. It is a declaration of basic primarphes of hear rights an freedome, to be strong with the approval of the percent as a part of the approval of the percent of all and a father work of active and for all applies of all along the control of the control of
- 137. I montel., olegit. (faut racis, Macc.) 200, 13, 200, pp. 19-22, 730-339.

WILLIAM SET CHE

THE RESERVE OF THE PARTY OF THE

- 138. Id., $13a, 289: Reparation for Injuries Suffered in the Service of the United Sations (11 Ipril 1949) I.C.J. Rop. 1949, 174-219.
- 139. H. Lauterpacht, n International Pill of the dights of New York, 1,45)
- 140. Id. at 126.
- 141. Id.
- 142. Id. at 128.
- 143. The Member States selected to comprise this Committee were: Australia, Chile, China, France, Lebanon, Mon, Thited Kingdom and Thited States of America. Report of the Drafting Committee, UN Doc. 2/SN. 4/21 (1 July 1747): Inited Tations Yearbook on Human Rights for 1947, Part III Doc. Innex, 402.
- 144. Mited Nations Yearbook on Human Nights for 1047, Part III Doc. /nnex, 486.
- 145. Id. at 495.
- 146. Id. at 493.
- 147. Id. at 501.
- 143. Id., 487-492.
- 149. Id., 503-505.
- 150. Id. at 542.
- 151. Inited Nations Yearbook on Human Rights for 1643, Part III, 459.
- 152. Id.
- 153. Id. at 463.
- 154. B.g., article 21, Universal Declaration of Human Rights: "1. Everyone has the right to take part in the government of his country, directly or through freely chosen representatives. 2. Everyone has the right of equal access to public service in his country."
- 155. 3 UN GAOR, Part I, Third Committee, 21 Sept. 8 Dec. 1948, 348-362.

- 156. Doc. */C.3/286/Rev.1; 3 'N G OR, Part I, Phird Committee innex. 25-26.
- 157. N Doc. 1/800; 'N Doc. 1/C.3/256/Rev.l: 3 IN G.CR. Part I, Third Committee Annex at 25.
- 153. IN Doc. 1/C.3/244; TI Doc. 1/C.3/286/Rev.1; 3 F GLOR, Part I, Third Committee Annex at 25.
- 149. IN Dec. 1/0.3/260; IN Dec. J/0.3/206/Lev.1; 3 IN ONOR Part I. Third Committee Annex at 26.
- 160. 3 W G CR. Part I, Third Committee, Al cont. 1 Tec. 1948 at 350.
- 161. Id. nt 351.
- 162. 16.
- 163. Id. at 352-353.
- 164. Id. at 354.
- 165. Id. at 355.
- 166. Id., 359-360.
- 167. 10., 361-362.
- 168. 3 WW GAOR, Part I, Plenary Meetings, 852-935.
- 169. Id. at 932-933; United Mations Tearbook on Muran Rights for 1648, Part III, 465-466.
- 170. 213 NTS 221 (1955); 1 Yrbk of the European Conventions on Europe 21ghts (1955-1956-1957) 4-36.
- 171. Smerican Convention on Human Rights, Inter- merican Specialized Conference on Human Rights, Doc. (Conglish) Rev. 1 Corr. 2.
- 172. See Note 154, supra. See also, article 23 of the american Convention on Essan Rights, Note 171, supra.
- 173. Griffin, The light to a Single Nationality, 40 Tample Law 9. 57, Pall 1966. Griffin predicates his argument on the principles that 'nationality as sociological reality is by nature not capable of division between two or more states" and that 'conduct of the individual furnishes the only solid juridical foundation for recognition of single nationality."

PAN - CM / ARS 1502 + L3 =

- 173. (Cont'd) Id. at 64. The decision as to which State or States would surrender their claims would be made on the basis of an extension of the dectrine of 'effective' or 'dominant" nationality. In this latter connection, see <a href="Interior Extension of States of Species Extension Connection of States of Species Extension of States of Species Extension of States of Species Extension of States Consillation Commission (1977), 22 Int'l. In Section 1977, 22 Int'l. In Section 1977, 22 Int'l. In Section 1977, 25 Int'l. In Section 1977, 25 Int'l. In Section 1977, 27 Int'l. Interior Court Reports 254 (1976); and the Intifficient Case, Note 2, Supra.
- CF. 'The same purely nominal -- and, in effect, 274. deceptive -- solution /accomodating polarised views/ was adopted in the matter of nationality. After starting, in the first part of Article 15, that 'ever one has the right to a nationality', the Declaration that 'everyproceeds to lay down that 'no one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his nationality'. The natural implication of the principle that everyone is entitled to a nationality would be the prohibition of deprivation -- whether arbitrary or otherwise -- of nationality in a way resulting in statelessness. None of the states which in the period between the two world wars resorted to deprivation of nationality en masse for political or racial reasons would have admitted that such measures were arbitrary. They were, in their view, dictated by the highest necessities of the state. In a pronouncement claiming primarily moral authority there should have been no room for the institution of statelessness, which is a stigma upon international lew and a challenge to human dignity in an international legal system in which nationality is the main link between the individual and international law. There was no inclination to soften the impact of that incongruous contradiction by the adoption of the principle that persons who, because of statelessness, do not enjoy the protection of any government, shall be the concern of the United Mations. A French proposal to that effect was rejected both by the Human Rights Commission and by the Committee of the Committee of the General Assembly." N. Lauterpacht, The Phiversal Declaration of Human Michte, Wilv B.Y.I.L. (1948) 354 at 374.
- 175. McNair and Watts, The Legal Dffects of Mar (Cambridge: hiversity Press, 1966): II Oppenheim, op.cit. (Lauterpacht, 7th.ed. 1952) 9293, pp.653-654.
- 176. McNair and Watts, op.cit. at 447.
- 177. II Opponheim, op. cit., 8293.

the restaurance of the same of

THE RESERVE AND ADDRESS OF THE PARTY OF THE

- 176. 59 Stat. 1031, 75 993; 3 Sevans 1153.
- 179. II Oppenheim, on.cit., 8292d. at 647-643.
- 180. MeDougal and Felicieno, op.cit. at 71.
- 181. II Oppenheim, op.cit., 8294 at 654.
- 182. 1 ochwarzenberger, A Manual of International Law (4th.ed., 1960) at 208
- 183. Id.
- 104. II Oppenheim, op. cit., 88349, 350, pp. 738-742.
- 135. Id., $350.
- 186. 36 Stat. 2310; TS 540: 1 Bevans 654: II Malloy 2290. Hereinafter referred to as Mague Convention V.
- 187. 36 Stat. 2415; TS 545: 1 Devans 723; II Malloy 2352. The 'hited States is a party with reservation and understanding. Hereinafter referred to as lague Convention IIII.
- 188. Article 20 of Mague Convention V and Article 20 of Mague Convention VIII.
- 199. Pisheo, International Law, Cases and terisla (2nd.ed., 1962), 362.
- 190. Treatics in Porce (1 Jan. 1970), Dept. of State Pub. 1913, pp. 346, 348.
- 191. Bishop, loc.cit.
- tiality to prohibit passage through his duty of impartiality to prohibit passage through his territory of men who intend to enlist, whether they pass singly or in numbers. Thus, in 1870, Switzerland did not object to Frenchmen travelling (through Geneva for the purpose of reaching French corps, or to Germans travelling through Basle for the purpose of reaching German corps, on condition, however, that these men travelled without arms and uniform. On the other hand, when France during the France-Jerman War organised an office in Basle for the purpose of sending bodies of Mastian volunteers through Witzerland to the south of France, Switzerland correctly closed it down because this official organisation of the passage of whole bodies

AND RESIDENCE OF THE PARTY OF T

A PERSON NAMED IN COLUMN TWO IS NOT THE OWNER, THE PARTY NAMED IN COLUMN TWO IS NOT THE OWNER, THE PARTY NAMED IN COLUMN TWO IS NOT THE OWNER, THE OWNER,

AND AN ADDRESS OF THE PARTY AND ADDRESS OF THE

Windowski and the state of the

the feet terms in the same of the later with the same of

AND REEL

of the life was not a properly and the last to the las

- 1- 1-60, 1254

THE PERSON NAMED IN COLUMN 2 AND PERSON NAMED IN

The same of the sa

THE RESIDENCE AND PERSONS AND ADDRESS OF THE PERSONS AND PERSONS ASSESSMENT AND PARTY AND PARTY

all today to retain my to be be a long of the party of the

the same in which print and all prints at many or white

AND DESCRIPTION OF REAL PROPERTY.

The second real of the party of the second s

10. entil 'of volunteers through 'en noural territor, or rore or less egod to a passage of troops.

The Second Harue Conference Lanctioned this distinction, for irticle 6 of Convention V. whete that 'the responsibility of a neutral lower is not involved by the mere fact that persons cross the frontier individually (isolement) in order to offer their services to one of the belligerents. A promentum a contrario justifies the conclusion that the responsibility of a neutral is involved in case it allows men to cross the frontier in a body in order to enlist in the forces of a belligerent.

the forming of corps of combatants, must be prevented by a neutral, a fortion he is required to prevent the organisation of a hostile expedition from his territory against either belligerent. This takes place when a band of men combine under a commander for the purpose of starting from the neutral territory and joining the belligerent forces. The case, however, is different if a number of individuals, not organised into a body under a commander, swift in company from a neutral State for the purpose of enlisting with one of the belligerents.

- 193. 5 TH GATE, PLENDER MOCKINES, Vol. I, 589-577. 5 TH GATE, First Committee, Vol. I, 191-453.
- 194. II Oppenheim, op.sit., 0322 at 687.
- 195. (June 7, 1911) 1911 For. Tel. 404 at 501-502: quoted in VII Hackworth, qu.cit. (1943) at 410.
- 196. IV 1940 Por. Rel. 677 at 677.
- 197. June 25, 1940, c.645, 62 Stat. 745.
- 198. II Oppenheim, on cit., 8322 at 637.
- 199. McMair and Watts, on oit. at 449-450.
- 200. 11., 452.
- 201. 10., 452-453.
- 202. Drownlie, Volunteers and the law of der and deutrality, 5 Int'l. and Comp. law J. (1958) 570, 575.
- 203. Id. at 574-575.

- 204. Carcia-Mora, International Law and the Law of Mortile lilitary Expeditions, 27 ordion Lew (ev. (1993-79)
- 207. Id., 316; McDougal and Feliciano, on. 211., 438; Drownlie, on. 611., 577-578.
- 206. . cDougal and Feliciano, go.cit. at 439-440.
- 207. Garcia-Mora, on cit. at 316.
- 208. Dromlie, op.cit. at 577.
- 209. Id.
- 210. 14., 572-573.
- 211. ReDougal and Peliciano, on cit., 436.
- 212. Garcia-More, op.cit., 311-312.
- 213. 10., 331.
- 214. Id., at 312.
- 215. Brownlie, op.cit., 579.
- 216. Id.
- 217. 3 J. GACR Doc. A/810: United Nations Yearbook on Research lights for 1948, Part III, 466.
- 218. Hent v. Dalles, 357 U.S. 117, 78 S.Ct. 1113 (1958).
- 219. Low of Leturn, 5710-1950, 4 Laws of the State of Israel (auth. translation) (hereinafter LoI) 114 (1950), 3s amended by law of Return (incomment) 5714-1954; 8 LSI 144 (1954) and Nationality Law, 5712-1952, 6 -LSI 50 (1952).
- 220. At least one nation, however, has declined to adopt the approach that the absence of a rejection of Israeli nationality is an indication of an affirmative desire to acquire such nationality sufficient to result in the loss of prior nationality. In the Revenue case, the applicant claimed that, nonwithstanding the fact that she had acquired the nationality of Israel by virtue of Article 2 of the Law of Return, she was still entitled to Italian nationality, on the ground that the acquisition by her of

- I will pull with ment are a subject to the property of DOT-THE WAR -100 Laure Statement as provided by Irticle 3(1) of the Italian Law of June 13, 1912 establishing criteria for the loss of Italian nationality. The Tribunal of Rome held that the applicant was entitled to a declaration that she remained an Italian citizen on the ground that, although she had "voluntarily" acquired the nationality of Israel, the acquisition of that nationality was not "spontaneous" within the meaning of Article 3(1) of the applicable statute. The court stated:

tion of a person's legally relevant will, though possibly influenced by 'metua ab intrinseco', which is normally immaterial as far as our law is concerned, 'spontaneity' results in the manifestation of a sill entirely independent of all external factors."

The legislator did not foresee the case of voluntary acquisition of a foreign nationality where spontaneity is lacking, which cannot constitute a case of loss of Italian nationality. The interpretation, which is in accordance with the letter and spirit of the law, was also adopted by our diplomatic and consular representatives on the spot, who put up a notice at the Consulate in Tel Aviv that failure to make a contrary declaration, as provided by the law of Israel, would not in itself result in the loss of Italian nationality. In this case there can be no doubt that the acquisition of the nationality of Israel by the applicant, though it was voluntary, was certainly not spontaneous.

"The title of the "Law of Return", which applies not to all immigrants but only to the Jewish immigrant who comes to Palestine, is significant in itself. ... country which emerges in an atmosphere of passion fanned by the continuous perils to which its existence is exposed, and whose main motive is the return of the sons to the land of their fathers, stresses the relitious appeal and shows that any sign of minor opposition to the new State is also regarded as a sirn of lack of religious conviction. This in inself implied a psychological interaction which is incompatible with an expression of spontaneity and undoubtedly made it very difficult for the applicant to make an express declaration that she did not desire to become part and parcel of this community to whose faith she belonged and among whose members she lived. The leaders of that community would have regarded her attitude as being opposed more to the religious than the political community. It would have indicated at least a trace of renunciation. Such a situation therefore requires, in application of

- 220. Cont'd. "the principles enunciated above, that the applicant can and must be considered an Italian citizen, and that her application must be granted in full." Ravenne v. Ministeri Interno, Tesoro e Pubblica Istruzione, (Italy, Tribunal of Nome.
  25 February 1955) 26 Int'l Law Rep. 376 (1956 II).
- 221. Nationality Law, Part One, para. 5, Note 219, sunra.
- 222. Defense Service Law, 5719-5719 (Consolidated Version), 13, LSI 328.
- 223. James Feron, The New York Times, Vol CVIII, 23 Jove ber 1969, p. L 11.
- 224. Id.
- v. Italian Republic, Note 173, supra: The Cenevaro Case (Italy v. Peru), Note 173, supra: The Cottebona Case, Note 2, supra.
- 206. See Note 3, supra.
- 227. Bar-Yaacov. Dual Nationality (M.Y.: Praeger, 1961) at 265, 268.
- 220. 3 Cir., 1953, 206 F.2d 592.
- 229. D.C.R.I. 1955, 133 F. Supp. 4+2.
- 230. Id. at 444-1445.
- 231. 3 Cir., 1958, 254 F.2d. 379.
- 232. Id. at 381.
- 233. Cafiero v. Lennedy, D.C.N.J. 1966, 262 F. Supp. 140. See also, Coumas v. Brownell, C.A. Cal. 1955, 222 F. 2d. 331; Acheson v. Maenza, C.A. Dist. Col. 1953, 202 F. 2d. 453.
- 234. Mushrat v. United States, supra at 362, 31 S.Ct. at 256.
- 235. "The Legislature has the power to decide what the policy of the law shall be, and if it has intimated its will, however indirectly, that will should be recognized and obeyed." Mr. Justice Nolmes speaking in Johnson v. Inited States, 1 Cir., 1900, 163 F. 30, 32, quoted

Children and the same in grant law our institute THE RESERVE AND ADDRESS OF THE PARTY ADDRESS OF THE PARTY AND ADDRESS OF THE PARTY ADDRESS OF ·200 -day The state of the s and the same of the same of the same of the same

- 235. Cont'd. quoted with approval in F.T.C. v. Jantzen, Inc., 386 U.S. 228, 235, 97 S.Ct. 998, 1002 (1967).
- 236. J.B.D.C. Dist. Col. 1969, 296 F. Supp. 1247.
- 237. 3 U.S.C. $1401(a)(7).
- 238. 8 ".S.C. $1401(b).
- 239. 296 P. Supp. at 1252.
- 240. Id. at 1250.
- 241. Id. at 1252.
- 240. Id.
- 243. 38 Thited States Law Week 3005.
- 244. Maxey, Loss of Nationality: Individual Choice or Government Flat?, 26 albany Law Nev. 151 (1962) at 174-175.
- 245. Lolson, "Voluntary Relinquishment" of American Citizenship: A Provosed Definition, 53 Cornell Law Pev. 325 (1967-63).
- 246. Id. at 335-336.
- 247. Id. at 329.
- 248. Id. at 328.
- 249. Boudin, Involuntary Loss of American Nationality, 73 Harvard Law Rev. 1510 (1959-60).
- 250. Id. at 1527.
- 251. A borrowing of Maxey's characterization of the Chief Justice's phrase "sovereignty of the people" in Perez v. Brownell, supra.
- 252. U.S. v. Bowman, 260 U.S. 94, 43 J.Ct. 39 (1922): Blackmer v. U.S., App. J.C., 284 U.S. 421, 52 J.Ct. 252 (1931). See also, 48 C.J.S. International Lew 511.
- 253. I Oppenheim, op.cit. (4th.Ed.) $145, quoted with approval in Rischmer v. U.S., 284 U.S. at 437, 52 C.Ct. at 254.

A THE RESERVE AND A PARTY OF THE PARTY OF TH 13,62 LIVE · Ess 4746 No. of Concession, and the Concession, which the Concession is not to the Concession in Concession i A33

- 254. 356 7.S. at 60, 78 S.Ct. at 577.
- 255. 387 U.S. at 293, 87 S.Ct. at 1681.
- 256. Duvall, Expetriation Under United States Law, Perez to Afronia, The Learch for a Abilorophy of American Citizenship, 56 Virginia Law Nev. 400 (Apr. 1970).
- 257. Id. at 433-434.
- 258. Section 349(c) of the Immigration and Mationality Act; 8 U.S.C. $1481(c).
- 259. Duvall, op.cit. at 443. Mr. Duvall indicates that although the phrase "engaging in hostilities against the United States" has not been administratively or judicially defined, it is "probably" restricted to North Vietnam and North Rorea. Hostilities may be short of acts of war but do not extend to the absence of diplomatic relations. Id., 443.
- 260. Id., 443-445.
- 261. Id., 453.
- 262. Nationality Act of 1940, Section 401(e), supra.
- 263. Report of the President's Commission on Immigration and Naturalisation, Whom Je Shall Nelcome (Jashington, D.C.: 6.P.O., 1953).

AND REAL PROPERTY AND PERSONS AND

A STATE OF THE PARTY OF THE PAR

WELL AND WATER AND

The second secon

THE THE WAR

1500 100 1200

Account play had proposed your of the real part of the part of the

THE RESERVE OF THE PARTY OF THE

appendix 4

Chilici ch din The Mar Chiling and in the THE TANK

ttorney General's Statument of Interpretation Concerning Expatriation of Mited States Citizens

Jeninary 10 , 100

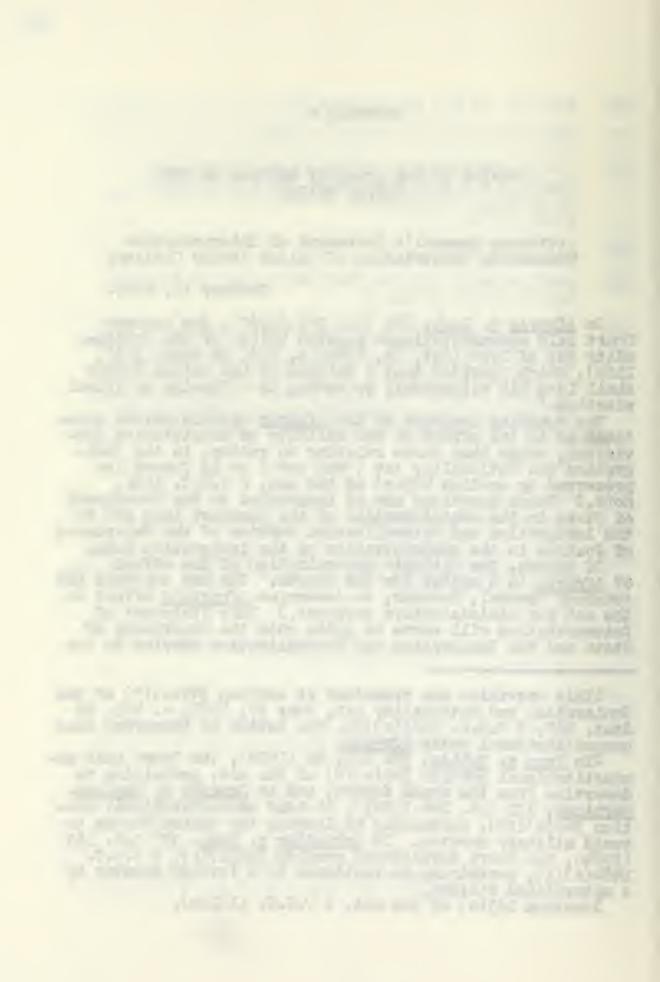

In frozin v. Tusi: 307 V.O. 253 (1967), the Tarrior Court held unconstitutional section +01(e) of the lational ality let of 1940 (Oct. 14, 1940, c. 376, 54 Stat. 1137, 1169), which provided that a citizen of the Thitse States shall loss his citizenship by voting in a foreign political elaction. 4

The sweeping language of the frovin opinion raises ques-tions as to its effect on the validity of an atriction provisions, other than those relating to voting, in the Immigration and Mationality Act ('the act') or in former law preserved by section 40%(c) of the act, S U.C.C. 1101, note.2 These questions are of importance to the Department of State in the administration of the passport laws and te the Imagration and Naturalization Service of the Derrt. en. of Justice in the administration of the immigration laws.

Of course, the ultimate determination of the effect of libraria is a matter for the courts. The act expowers the torney General, however, to determine firevials effect on the act for administrative purposes. 3 This Statement of Interpretation will serve to guide both the Department of State and the Emmigration and Naturalization Cervice in the performance of their functions insofar as they involve quet-tions of loss of citizenship.

Immigration and Nationality ict, June 27, 1952, c. 477. 66
Stat. 267, 8 J.S.C. 1481(a)(5). The latter is therefore also unconstitutional under ifrom.

Alm Tron v. Dulles, 350 J.S. 86 (1958), the Court held unconstitutional section 349(a)(3) of the act, pertaining to desertion from the armed forces, and in Longolf v. Mendolf-lartines. 372 J.S. 1948 (1963), it held unconstitutional section 349(a)(10), pertaining to leaving the mited States to avoid military service. In Committer v. Dust. 377 J.J. 183 (1964), the Court invalidated section 352(a)(1), a.s.G. 1464(a)(1), pertaining to recidence in a foreign country by naturalized citizen. naturalized citizen. 3Cection 103(a) of the act, 3 .5.C. 1103(a).

1. Tection 401(e) of the 1940 act had been ruled constitutional in the Court's earlier decision in Teroz v. Brownell, 356 1.8. 4: (1958). The majority opinion in fer a rejected the argument that 'the power of Congress to terminate citiremaining depends upon the citizen's assent. 350 %, at 61.

from a result overraled for a and held, in ground.

With the Chief Justice's dispert in feron, that the loversment to dithout power to deprive a citizen of his citizenship for voting in a foreign election. 387 %.5. to 257. The rule laid down in from is that a Thited It to citizen has a constitutional right to remain a citizen 'unless he volunturily relinquishes that citizenchip. 337 ". . at 203.

ifrovin did not expressly aldress itself to the question of defining what declarations or other conduct can properly be regarded as a "voluntary relinguishment" of citizonshi ). as a consequence, it did not provide guidelines of sufficient detail to permit me to pass definitely upon the validity of other ematriating provisions of the act. It did, however, stress the constitutional mandate that no citizen form or naturalized in the United States can be deprived of his citi-zenship unless he has "voluntarily relinquished" it.

On the question of what constitutes 'voluntary roling inrent," we must look to earlier cases in the Juprene Court. Some guidance may be found in earlier opinions of the Justices who joined in the Court's opinion in Afrovia. Particularly relevant are the Chief Justice's dissent in Rerea, which was cited in Arovin with approval, and the concurring orinion of Justice Reck (who wrote the opinion of the Court in Marchia) in Mishibara v. Dulles, 376 39 129, 138 (1958), decided the footnotes outtted):

In Perez, the Chief Justice stated (356 W.S. at 67-69:

'It has long been recognized that citizenship may not only be voluntarily renounced through exercise of the right of oupatriation but also by other actions in derogation of unlivid d allegiance to this country. Thise the essential qualities of the citizen-state relationship under our Constitution pruclime the exercise of governmental power to divest mited States citizenship, the establishment of that relationship did not i pair the principle that conduct of a citizen shoring a voluntary transfer of allegiance is an abandorment of citizen-.hip. Mearly all covereignties recognize that acquisition of foreign nationality ordinarily shows a renunciation of citizonship. Nor is this the only act by which the citizen may show a voluntary abandonment of his citizenship. Any action by which he manifests allegiance to a foreign state may be so inconsistent with the retention of citizenship as to result in loss of that status. In recognizing the consequences of such action, the Government is not taking away United States citizenship to implement its general regulatory nowers, for, as previously indicated, in my judgment citizenship is immune from divestment under these powers. Rather, the Government is simply giving formal recomition to the inevitable consequence of the citizen's own voluntary surrender of his citizenship."

In Jishikawa, Mr. Justice Slock stated (356 U.S. at 139): of course a citizen has the right to abandon or renounce his citizenship and Congress can enact measures to regulate and affirm such abjuration. But whether citizenship has been voluntarily relinquished is a question to be determined on the facts of each case after a judicial trial in full conformity with the Bill of Rights. Although Congress may provide rules of evidence for such trials, it cannot declare that such equivocal acts as service in a foreign army, particleation in a foreign election or desertion from our armed force; establish a conclusive presumption of intention to throw off American nationality. Cf. Tot. v. Inited States, 319 V.S. 463. Of course such conduct may be highly persuasive evidence in the particular case of a purpose to abandon citizenship."

The foregoing quotations do not come from majority opinions, and frovin does not adopt them. Indeed, frovin does not reach the question of whether it may be possible under some circumstances for allegiance to be transferred or abondoned without constituting a voluntary relinquishment of the status of citizenship. That question must await further court decision. Under any reading of Afroyim, however, it is clear that an act which does not reasonably manifest an individual's transfer or abandonment of allegiance to the United States cannot be made a basis for expatriation.

2. For administrative purposes, and until the courts have clarified the scope of Afroyim, I have concluded that it is the duty of executive officials to apply the act on the following basis. "Voluntary relinquishment" of citizenship is not confined to a written renunciation, as under section 349 (a)(6) and (7) of the act, 8 J.S.C. 1481(a)(6) and (7). It can also be manifested by other actions declared expatriative under the act, if such actions are in derogation of allegiance to this country. Yet even in those cases, ifrovin leaves it open to the individual to raise the issue of intent.

Once the issue of intent is raised, the act makes it clear that the burden of proof is on the party asserting that expatriation has occurred. 4 Afroyim suggests that this burden is not easily satisfied by the Government. In the words of Justice Black quoted above from his concurring opinion in lishing m, the voluntary performance of some acts can'be

<sup>43</sup>ection 349(c) of the act, added in 1961, 8 J.J.C. 1481(c)

the same of the sa The state of the s and the second s the second secon The second secon the state of the s The second secon the property will be the property of the second sections. COLOR DE MANY THE TO ADMINISTRATION AND RESIDENCE AND RESIDENCE.

highly persuasive evidence in the particular case of a survose to abandon citizenship." Yet some Linds of conduct, though within the proscription of the statute, simply will not be sufficiently probative to support a finding of voluntary expatriation.

For instance, it is obviously not enough to establish a volunt ry relinquishment of citizenship that an individual accepts employment as a public school teacher in a foreign This I have already decided in the case of a dual national, Matter of Sally on Becher, 12 DW. 390; Interior Decision 17/1 (August 21, 1967). different case would be presented by an individual's acceptance of an important political post in a foreign government.

similar approach can be ta'en with r spect to service in a for ign army, depending on the particular circumstances involved. Thus, an individual who enlists in the armed forces of an alli d country does not necessarily evidence that by so doing he intends to abandon his United States citizenship. But it is highly persuasive evidence, to say the least, of an intent to abandon United States citizenship if one enlists voluntarily in the armed forces of a foreign government enraged in hostilities against the United States. 6

The examples mentioned above, are, of course, merely illustive. In each case the administrative authorities must make a judgment, based on all the evidence, whether the individual comes within the terms of an expatriation provision and has in fact voluntarily relinquished his citizenship. In order to avoid conflicts in interpretation between the Department of State and the Immigration and Naturalization bervice, these agencies should undertake to consult with each other; if any substantial difference should arise as to any particular type of situation, it should be referred to the .ttorney General for resolution.

3. Finally, note should be made as to the scope of this Statement of Interpretation. I believe the Afroyin principles reach, and therefore this Statement covers, all of section 349(a) of the act, section 350 insofar as it relates to dual nationals born or naturalized in the 'hited States, and section 40%(c) insofar as it purports to continue the effectiveness of individual losses of nationality under the similar provisions of sections 401 and 404 of the Mationality et of

There are additional considerations relating to dual nationals born abroad which may affect their acquisition and

<sup>5.</sup>ee section 349(a)(4)(4) and (B) of the act, 3 J.S.C. 1481 (a)(4)(.) and (B). 6See section 349(a)(3), 8 U.S.C. 1481(a)(3).

100

The second secon THE RESERVE AND ADDRESS OF THE PARTY AND ADDRE the property of the property o The second secon The state of the s The second secon and the control of the court of the control of the The second secon THE CO. LANS CO. LANSING MICHIGAN PROPERTY AND ADDRESS OF THE PARTY AND the state of the second section in the section in the second section in the section in the second section in the section in th THE RESIDENCE OF THE PARTY OF T wall and victories amendment one about on branch processing in 1988. the state of the s and the second and representative by the contribute before the makes no other property states where the second service and any investment of the last of production for any contributions the same property of the same 14100 would have presented been and any local property for order a friend begin THE RESERVE OF THE PARTY OF THE The same of the sa 30000 the part of the parties of the parti THE RESIDENCE OF THE PROPERTY OF THE PARTY O

Annuele - s.c s age - All Little retention of United States 'citizenship.' This matter is currently in litigation. Thence this Statement does not necessarily apply to loss of United States citizenship acquired as a result of birth abroad to a citizen parent or a rents.

or parents.
This itutement has no application to a revocation of naturalization unlawfully procured. See Mroyin V. Rivi., 307 T. .. t 207, n. 23.

we have to lake up and

<sup>7</sup> ellei y. Rusk, awaiting decision in the Thited tates District Court for the District of Columbia (No. 3002-67, decided Feb. 28, 1969; appeal to United States Supreme Court pending).

THE TAXABLE PARTY OF SAME

1600 Touth Time Stret Lartment 410 I Thington, Virginia 22202 13 July 1970

logal dvisor De-artment of State 2201 C Street, WW Washington, D.C.

Dear Cir:

On November 11, 1969, the Department of State issued a statement for the press (No. 337) concerning service by private United States citizens in foreign armed forces. In this release it was stated, in part:

"The Department of State strongly opposes such involvement by private Americans as contrary to the foreign policy interests of the United States.

और और और और

The Department of State is actively considering whether there are additional steps that might be taken to support more fully the colicy objectives of our Government on this matter."

In the context of a statement for the press on October 18, 1965 on the same subject, it would appear that the "additional steps" referred to would be something other than enforcement of dection 349(a)(3) of the Lamigration and Jatlonality Act of 1952, which provides for loss of Thited States nationality for unsutherized service in the armed forces of a foreign state.

Could you advise me as to whether the Department of State has determined whether such "additional steps" exist unl, if so, how I may be informed of them?

Thank you for your assistance in this matter.

Very truly yours,

will resid

AND DESCRIPTION OF PERSONS ASSESSED.

100

Desired of the

premin C

Department of State ashington, D.C. 20720

the said to the said to

Pr. G.L. Michael 1600 Poith Tads Street partment 418 S rlington, Virginia 22202

Dear Mr. Michael:

The Department has received your letter dated July 13, 1970 inquiring whether any additional steps have been taken in support of the opposition by the Department of State to the service by American citizens in the armed forces of foreign states.

Section 349 (a)(3) of the Immigration and Nationality Let of 1952, to which you refer has not been specifically invalidated by court decision, but the Supreme Court in Lifewim v. Musk left in doubt whether such foreign military service in all cases would result in loss of United States citizenship. It is this area of doubt that has led the Department to consider additional measures. The Department continues strongly to oppose such involvement by private mericans as contrary to the foreign policy interests of the United States and this matter remains under continuing review.

Dimerely your ,

hesistant legal /dviser for dministration and Consular frairs

20 FEB 73

21954

Thesis M5753 120625

Michael

A legal analysis of loss of United States nationality as a result of unauthorized service in the Armed Forces of a foreign state.

8 DEC 70 20 FEB 73

DISPLAY 21954

Thesis M5753 120625

Michael

A legal analysis of loss of United States nationality as a result of unauthorized service in the Armed Forces of a foreign state.

thesM5753
A legal analysis of loss of United State

3 2768 001 88311 9
DUDLEY KNOX LIBRARY